The NEW Core Curriculum

By Brother Emery C. Mollenhauer, F.S.C., Ph.D.

In a way, curriculum is a subject like pornography. Most people have views about it and views which are rarely felt to be completely expressed by arguments of others, however apparent or exhaustive. Since a core curriculum, in particular, directly demonstrates how an institution fulfills its educational mission and indirectly determines staffing needs, it is well-nigh inevitable that lengthy exchanges of views would typify its review and revision. Such a pace characterized the process of La Salle's recent core curriculum revision. Assessment of the core curriculum began in September, 1982, and culminated in March, 1985, with the adoption of a revised core curriculum.

Before focusing on the recent core curriculum revision, which will be in effect in the fall, 1986, I think it appropriate to offer preliminary observations on the place of the core in the total baccalaureate program, the reasons for curricular revision, and the evolution of the La Salle core curriculum in the last thirty years.

The predominant paradigm for undergraduate curriculum consists of the major, free electives, and a core curriculum. In some institutions, the core curriculum is designated as "general education." The major, which, understandably, means most to the individual student, is, unfortunately, less frequently evaluated than the core curriculum. (From the beginning of the recent curriculum revision discussions, our own Curriculum Committee established the objective of evaluation of individual majors as a priority to be addressed immediately after details related to implementation of the revised curriculum have been attended to.) Free electives constitute those courses which are not part of the core curriculum and are not required for fulfilling major requirements. Students elect these courses to build a minor or a second major, or to study subjects which particularly speak to their needs and interests.

The core curriculum or the general education requirements consist of those courses which are required of all undergraduate students in fulfillment of degree requirements. Most institutions depend on a core curriculum as a means of expressing how the institution realizes its mission and objectives operationally through its educational offerings. Hence, the core curriculum represents the principal educational effort of an institution to develop the kind of educated person it wants its graduates to be.

Review and revision of core curriculum occur primarily in order to assure educational vitality and academic integrity. Any institution that wants to survive the ephemerality of the epoch and of the interests and needs of its constituency must continually evaluate its curricular requirements. The La Salle curriculum which will be in effect in September, 1986, then, represents a core which, after three years of discussion, the faculty have agreed is the best means of serving the students of the 90s.

A detailed review of the evolution of the La Salle core curriculum in the last thirty years would, of course, necessitate a separate and lengthy article. However, it may be worthwhile to indicate the proportion the core curriculum has had in the total requirements for the undergraduate degree in those years. Before rehearsing that information, I think it important to recognize that the total number of semester credit hours required for the baccalaureate degree constitutes a basic constraint or limit to the number of courses or subjects that may be included in a core curriculum. Further, the possibilities for a more inclusive core curriculum are affected by the need in recent years to provide flexibility for students who want more course options and for those who are ambivalent about committing themselves to a specific major subject area.

Between 1956 and 1966, the total number of semester credit hours required for the baccalaureate degree was reduced from 148 to 120. That significant drop in the total number of credit hours for the degree was due in large part to a college-wide self-study and to a recommendation from a Middle States evaluation team twenty years ago.

In 1956, the college required 148 semester credit hours for the degree; core requirements ranged from 46% of the total hours for science majors, 47% for business majors, and 55% for arts and social science majors. Then, in 1962, the total semester hours required was reduced to 139, and the core curriculum requirements ranged from 50 to 56% of that total.

“It guarantees that the La Salle University graduate will have some collegiate curriculum: history, computer science

It is commonplace to recognize that in the late 60s and early 70s, college students tended to be fluent in dissent; at La Salle, that characteristic manifested itself in part by an interest in a less structured curriculum. Indirectly, the curriculum which was inaugurated in the fall, 1972, emerged as a response to the spirit of that era. The traditional core curriculum was replaced by General Education and Distribution requirements. Since those General Education and Distribution area requirements will be in effect until the class of 1989 graduates, perhaps it is pertinent to outline those general education requirements before moving on to specifics about the most recent revision.

The General Education courses have been directed toward imparting basic analytical and expressive skills through the study of value-oriented disciplines such as literature, religion, and philosophy. The General Education requirements call for two courses each in literature, philosophy and religion, as well as one course in writing. They are complemented by Distribution courses; the student must take two courses in each of four areas, exclusive of courses in the major.

Area I	Area II	Area III
English	Foreign Languages	Fine Arts
History	Mathematics	Philosophy
		Religion
Area IV	Area V
Economics	Biology
Political Science	Chemistry
Psychology	Geology
Sociology	Physics

Thus, the core curriculum currently consists of 37.5% of the total degree requirements. In addition to substantial choices of courses in the General Education and Distribution areas, this curriculum includes the possibility of ten free electives for most majors.

As early as the spring semester, 1977 (after two classes had been graduated under the present curriculum), the Curriculum Committee gave priority to the question of the effectiveness of the present curriculum. For a number of reasons, however, the Committee did not zero in on core curriculum assessment effectively until September, 1982.

Initially, the Committee tried to assess (a) to what extent the objectives of the General Education and Distribution areas had been realized in the last decade; (b) what problems have arisen in these areas (e.g., grade inflation or watering down of content, possibly related to increasing competition for students; the mix of under and upperclassmen in introductory courses; the overall election of introductory courses by upperclassmen); (c) whether any of these problems are related to the special groups of departments or to particular departments; (d) what are the values of the General Education and Distribution Areas; and (e) how could objectives be achieved in other, perhaps more effective, ways.

In the first months of curricular assessment, a number of shortcomings of the present core were identified: fragmentation; the excessive number of options (six courses in General Education to be chosen from a list of 23 courses and eight in the Distribution area to be chosen from 280, yes 280, catalogue listings); insufficient control of the substance and the challenge of courses; the problem of the mix of under and upperclassmen in introductory courses; and excessive competition for students that perhaps accounted for watering down of content and grade inflation.

At the same time, the Committee recognized that an era of decreasing enrollment inevitably exacerbated by department hegemony would not prove auspicious for a total curriculum revision. In the mind of the Committee, however, it has been clear that our objectives as a liberal arts college could be more effectively achieved by a substantial, though not a radical, revision of the core curriculum, rather than by tinkering with the present General Education and Distribution requirements.

It is, of course, impossible to rehearse the details of discussion of alternative core curricula which were proposed and discussed by the Committee, the faculty, and the students. Before outlining the revised curriculum, though, I want to summarize the characteristics of the revised curriculum which the Committee identified as constituting an improvement over the present curriculum.

- a. It assures the student would have a common, though not a uniform, experience in basic disciplines.
- b. While maintaining enough flexibility to allow students to pursue areas of their choice, it significantly clarifies the structure of the core.
- c. It assures that a student will study, in some depth, a core discipline directly related to the University's mission and objectives.
- d. The Foundation courses will introduce students to modes of conceptualization and verification of knowledge in basic subject areas.
- e. It guarantees that the La Salle University graduate will have some collegiate experience in four areas which are not represented in the present core curriculum: history, computer science, physical science, and social studies.
- f. Through predictive testing, students whose writing skills are less than adequate at the time of entry will be identified and a second writing course will be required of them.

experience in four areas which are not represented in the present core physical science, and social studies”

- g. Through special requirements concerning writing papers in all Foundation courses, it assures attention to developing students' writing skills beyond one composition course.

Here, then, is a paradigm of the revised curriculum which will be in effect in September, 1986:

The core curriculum is intended to help students broaden and consolidate their general education in the arts and sciences, and to build a foundation and counterbalance for an area of specialization. The core has two parts:

A. Foundation Courses

Ordinarily, a department may offer one or two Foundation courses. These courses are designed to help students organize previous knowledge as they begin college-level work and to introduce them to several new fields. They focus on fundamental skills (as in writing and computer science courses); on disciplines concerned with larger perspectives and ultimate values (religion, philosophy, history); and on the traditional ways of gaining knowledge and understanding (humanities, science, social science). Hence, individual courses are required in the following subjects:

writing<sup>1</sup>
philosophy history literature (English or foreign) science (biology, chemistry, geology, or physics) social science (economics, political science, psychology, or sociology)

B. Controlled Electives<sup>3</sup>

Controlled electives are intended to complete the core with a common, though not a uniform, experience of several of these disciplines. The electives are sequenced to give students a deeper and more challenging involvement with several subjects outside their major. The controlled electives, however, have several options:

1. a three-course sequence in one of these disciplines: literature, history, fine arts, or foreign language

1. English 108. The prerequisite for English 108 is English 107 or equivalent competence. Given the importance of developing basic writing skills, students for whom English 107 is waived are urged to consider a "writing enrichment course" in their major or a second writing course in the English Department.
2. The requirement may be satisfied by a competency test.
3. School of Business Administration majors may substitute Math 111 for one controlled elective course.

2. a two-course option in literature, history, fine arts, social sciences, or foreign languages<sup>4</sup>
3. a three-course option in philosophy and religion, with at least one course in each.

C. The Major

The policy on the number of courses that may be controlled by the major remains the same.

N.B.:

1. Foundation Courses:

- (a) May not be controlled by the major department. However, while these courses may not be counted as a major course, an individual course may be waived for a student majoring in a department represented in the Foundation area.
- (b) School of Business Administration majors may satisfy the social science requirement by taking Economics 101.

2. Controlled Electives:

- (a) Arts and Science departments cannot prescribe Controlled Electives for their majors. However, controlled electives can be used for a student's minor or for the second major if the student carries a dual major. The terms "minor" and "concentration" are interchangeable within the context of a newly adopted policy that six courses constitute a minor. Individual transcripts will indicate whether the student has graduated with a minor.

- (b) School of Business Administration majors can (1) use Controlled Electives for a minor or for the second major if the student carries a dual major; and (2) take Economics 201 to satisfy one course requirement in the two-course option area.

A special feature of the revised curriculum is the introduction of a "designated minor" in a discipline outside the student's major. This concentration of six courses in a second discipline or in a thematic concentration is expected to be a more popular option than the present dual-major system since it does not involve the heavy semester credit commitment of the dual major.

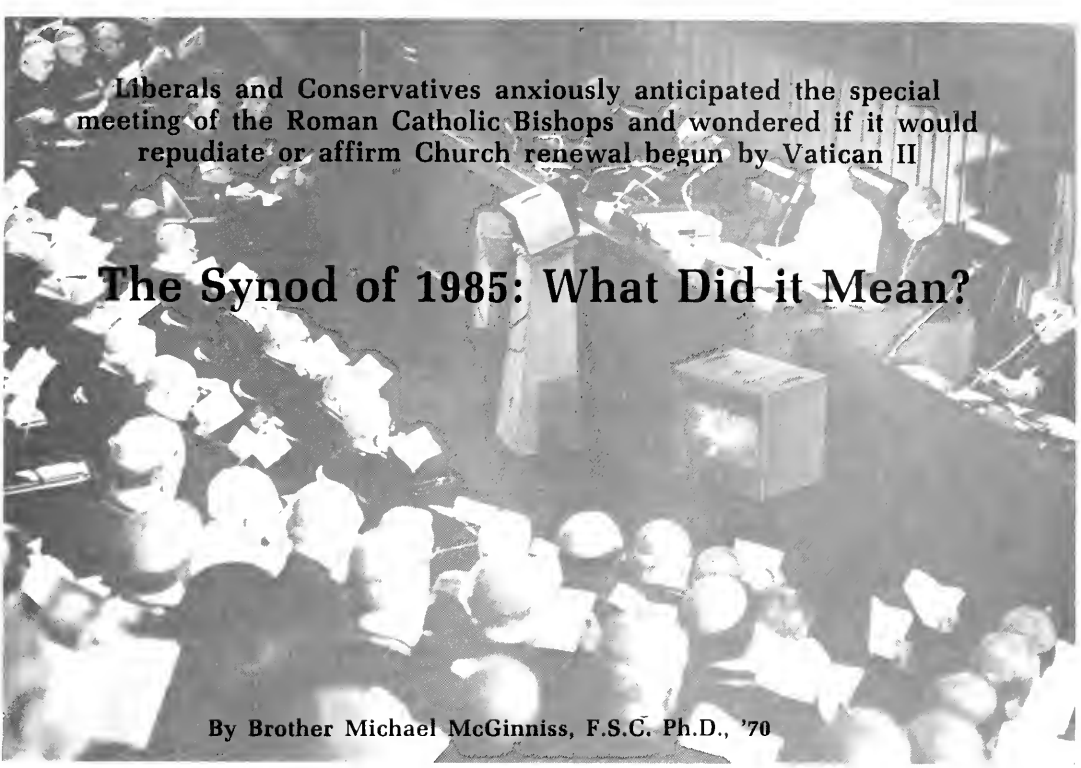

I would like to stress that the Curriculum Committee has been particularly alert to the need to monitor any revised curriculum. With the experience of the shortcomings of the 1972 curriculum, Committee discussions and decisions regularly have been correlated with challenges of implementation and with sustaining academic integrity in a revised curriculum. Thus, a set of "Guidelines for Core Curriculum Courses" and "Procedures for Quality Assurance in the Proposed Curriculum" was developed and was included in the package presented for voting in March, 1985. While space does not permit a review of those guidelines and procedures, I want to emphasize that they are integral to the implementation of the revised curriculum. In addition to specific directives concerning objectives, content and requirements of individual courses, the quality assurance procedures include, for example, strategies and actions for ongoing assessment and for personal and departmental accountability that should assure the academic integrity of the revised curriculum.

During the present academic year, the Curriculum Committee has been engaged in a number of issues related to the implementation of the new curriculum. In particular, the Committee has met with each of the fourteen chairpersons whose departments will be represented in the Foundation area and has reviewed and approved Foundation courses for the new curriculum. This year's agenda also includes a review of individual departmental proposals for courses in the three-course sequence and the two-course option segments of the revised curriculum.

I imagine that these paragraphs, though quite important in content in terms of the future of the university, are less than gripping. What is more, they do not lend themselves to an unctuous summary. Like the implementation of a curriculum itself, the work of the Curriculum Committee in sustaining academic integrity through its providing quality control of the revised curriculum should assure graduates of the '90s of an education which will survive the ephemerality of the subject matter. Like any curriculum, the most recently revised core surely has its imperfections; only distance will teach us what is worthy. ■

Liberals and Conservatives anxiously anticipated the special meeting of the Roman Catholic Bishops and wondered if it would repudiate or affirm Church renewal begun by Vatican II

The Synod of 1985: What Did it Mean?

By Brother Michael McGinniss, F.S.C. Ph.D., '70

In January of 1985, Pope John Paul II startled most of his fellow Roman Catholics and many observers of religion by calling a special meeting of the Bishops' Synod to evaluate the successes and failures of the Second Vatican Council. In the eleven months following that surprising announcement, the approaching Synod, which was to meet from November 25th until December 8th, sparked a lively debate, mostly in print and mostly in religious news media, about the Pope's real intentions for the Synod. The "liberal" interpretation generally viewed the Synod as bad news for the renewal of the Church which had been begun at the Second Vatican Council. These so-called liberals speculated that Pope John Paul II was waiting for a chance to repudiate Vatican II, to return the church to a situation more congenial to his experience, shaped in the embattled, yet traditional environment of Polish Catholicism. The "conservative" perspective, on the other hand, generally greeted the Pope's announcement with approval and even relief since the Synod seemed an opportunity to put the breaks on a renewal process gone wild. Those holding to this conservative perspective also viewed the Pope as desiring to return the church to a more tranquil and uniform condition. When newspapers like The Philadelphia Inquirer and The New York Times reported the approaching Synod, the same opposition between liberal and conservative opinion was evident and even sharpened by the tendency of the secular press to interpret developments within the Roman Catholic church solely as a function of John Paul II's personality.

More than a year has passed since the Pope's call for the Synod; the Synod itself is completed; its documents published; the post-Synod reporting too has run its course. What happened? Which "side" was proven right in its expectations for this controversial meeting—the liberals or the conservatives? The answer: neither "side" was vindicated. The liberals' fears were not realized: the Synod not only did not turn back the clock on renewal, it affirmed the basic directions established by the major documents of Vatican II. The conservatives' hopes were not fulfilled: Vatican II was affirmed not repudiated. Still the conservatives could be encouraged by the Synod's call for a new universal catechism intended to provide a framework for catechisms that might be prepared subsequently in various parts of the world. Such a worldwide catechism might help in softening the edges of the diversity in the church, a diversity which seems to many to threaten the very unity of the church.

What, then, was the significance of the Synod for the so-called "ordinary Catholic"? Was it, as a crude tally of winners and losers might suggest, a modest and indecisive victory for one side or the other? Was it an event of church officials with their own agenda, and not something that will impact upon the life of the whole community of the church? In order to answer those questions, it is helpful first to consider what a Synod is and, specifically, what this 1985 Synod accomplished.

What is a Synod?

A Synod is a meeting of a number of bishops from around the world which advises the Pope on matters of importance to the entire church. Synods as they exist in the present-day church are a result of Vatican II. As such, the Synod is an attempt to create a permanent part, or structure, of church life which would perpetuate the sense of cooperation and connectedness in governing and directing the church that participants in Vatican II experienced. Although it is difficult today to recall a sense of the popular excitement that surrounded the sessions of Vatican II, it is safe to say that the participants in the council shared a powerful experience of both the universality and cultural diversity of Catholicism—and that they wanted to continue that experience. Moreover, the very existence of the Synod is a testimony to Vatican II's realization that Catholicism needed some visible sign of the shared responsibility for the leadership of the Catholic Church that has always been the fundamental meaning of the expression "the college of bishops." As experience with the Synod has demonstrated, the Synod's existence alone has not resolved all the issues involved in shared or collegial leadership within Catholicism. Almost all Roman Catholics, as well as astute observers of the church, realize that a church with a dominating leader ultimately has little real need for shared leadership. Problems aside, the Synod has fulfilled its purpose of making the bishops themselves aware of their participation in the leadership of the worldwide Catholic Church.

The formal plan for the meetings of the Synod was established by Pope Paul VI, the pope who actually presided over the bulk of Vatican II and who served as pope during the demanding, and often frustrating, period of implementing the first reforms of the council. Since 1965 there have been nine synods: six have been so-called ordinary synods—that is, they were convened on a prearranged schedule and considered topics planned in advance; one was extraordinary; two were special—one dealing with developments in Dutch Catholicism and the other with Ukrainian Catholics. The ordinary synods have handled topics considered by the pope and bishops as applicable to the universal Catholic Church: for example, the ministerial priesthood, social justice, the family, reconciliation. The 1985 Synod was the second extraordinary meeting, so named because it was called to discuss an urgent topic decided upon by the Pope. Its membership was composed of one representative from each national or regional bishops' conference, selected representatives of the Curia, the church's central administration, and bishops personally selected by Pope John Paul II.

"Problems aside, the Synod has fulfilled its purpose of making the bishops, themselves, aware of their participation in the leadership of the worldwide Catholic Church."

The Synod's results have been reported to the church and to the world in differing ways. The 1971 Synod published its own document, on the topics of the priesthood and the essential link of social justice to the church's mission. The next four ordinary meetings followed a common pattern: a general statement or "message" to the world at large and a report to the pope, who subsequently published a document, called an apostolic exhortation, on the topics of the meeting. While the pattern may have developed for any of a number of reasons—perhaps the press of time and the difficulty of drafting a coherent collective report—recent ordinary synods have contributed significantly to the understanding that the Synod is only advisory to the pope. While it would be incorrect to claim that the Synod was ever intended by Vatican II to supersede the pope, its relationship to papal authority was probably not intended to be simply advisory either. This matter of reporting may appear to be a mere procedural issue, but the final text of the 1985 Synod implies that the status of the Synod is still a matter to be worked out, for both the bishops themselves and for the present pope. This extraordinary meeting published both a brief message to the people of God and its full final report. Press reports from the Synod, though tightly controlled and restricted by the secrecy of the proceedings, revealed that the decision to "go public" occasioned lively debate among the participants.

The Synod of 1985—What it Achieved

From the very first announcement of this event, the 1985 Synod was planned as a review and celebration of Vatican II, which Pope John Paul himself identified as the fundamental event of the Catholic Church in the contemporary period. The Pope's position on the centrality of Vatican II is of no little importance in understanding this Synod and the considerable controversy that it produced. The controversy centered on the Pope indirectly, and directly on Joseph Cardinal Ratzinger, the prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of Faith, the office in the Vatican administration charged with ensuring the orthodoxy of Catholic belief around the world. Cardinal Ratzinger holds a powerful position simply by virtue of being the prefect of the Congregation. His power is reinforced by the widespread perception that he has special access to the Pope, that he might be the Pope's stalking horse. Thus when Cardinal Ratzinger published a book (The Ratzinger Report, in its English translation) in which he decried Vatican II as destructive for Catholicism, many knowledgeable Catholics thought they were hearing the Pope's own concerns. When pressed by reporters accompanying him on one of his papal pilgrimages prior to the Synod, the Pope indicated that Cardinal Ratzinger was speaking for himself alone and not for the Pope.

What then did this Synod say about Vatican II? The bishops were remarkably direct in their assessment: "We firmly believe and we see that the church finds today in the council the light and strength that Christ has promised to give to his followers in each period of history" (quoting the Synod's "Message to the People of God"). While the same section of the Message refers to the undeniable fact that there have been problems in the post-Vatican II church ("errors, confusions, and defects . . . because of sin and human weakness"), the thrust of the Message and of the Final Report reaffirms that Vatican II is the fundamental event of contemporary Catholicism. The council's impact was, and remains, positive precisely because Vatican II has made it more likely that the church would be a vital and credible sign and sacrament of God's love for the human family and the whole of creation in a world far more secularized and more technologized than was imagined even at Vatican II itself.

In the Final Report, the bishops are still more blunt, though tentative, about solutions. They note that the achievements of Vatican II have been received well by the general membership of the worldwide Church. They also acknowledge, rather wistfully, that there have been problems in the past twenty years that cannot and should not be attributed to the council. Indeed the world changed around the Church and the Church, as a social institution, has found itself affected. Moreover, the bishops concede that in the First World (U.S. Catholics take note, along with those in Canada and Western Europe) "a certain estrangement is manifested toward the church, even though in this area of the world the fruits of the council abound" (from the Final Report). Conversely, in those areas of the world where the Church is oppressed by totalitarian governments or where the Church vigorously protests social injustices, the

"The bishops were remarkably direct in their assessment of Vatican II."

Church is more broadly, if not universally and uncritically, accepted. The bishops seem to be reminding themselves, as well as anyone who reads, that the "Blood of martyrs is the seed of the Church"—throughout Christian history and so too today.

What did the Synod say specifically about the council and the four major Vatican II documents around which the Synod's agenda had been constructed? The Final Report is organized into four major sections: The Mystery of the Church; Sources of Life for the Church; The Church as Communion; The Church's Mission in the World. In those sections, the bishops grouped their reflections on the Vatican II documents on the essential nature of the Church (Lumen Gentium), revelation (Dei Verbum), the liturgy (Sacrosanctum Concilium), and on the pastoral mission of the Church (Gaudium et spes).

The section on the mystery of the church acknowledges, somewhat somberly, that the "signs of the times"—a phrase from the Pastoral Constitution of Vatican II which became a kind of watchword for the church's openness to its context in history and society—in 1985 are not quite so encouraging as things seemed in the mid-1960s. A selective checklist of events since 1965 confirms the bishops' intuition: the Viet Nam war, two wars between Israel and Arab states, the Cambodian holocaust, strife in Northern Ireland, the dismemberment of Lebanon as a nation, a nuclear weapons build up in the context of growing tensions between the United States and the Soviet Union, worldwide economic difficulties—of which inflation, then unemployment and now austerity in government are the US share, famine in the poorer countries—most recently and most dramatically in Ethiopia, and the list could go on and on. In the face of this daunting prospect the bishops are somber, but not despairing. They choose to remind all church members that the church is essentially a religious community with a joyful Gospel:

The primary mission of the church, under the impulse of the Holy Spirit, is to preach and to witness to the good and joyful news of the election, the mercy and the charity of God which manifest themselves in salvation history, which through Jesus Christ reach their culmination in the fullness of time and which communicate and offer salvation to man by virtue of the Holy Spirit. (from the Final Report)

Because of this mission, it is incumbent on the Church to be a credible proclaimer of its Gospel. The key to its credibility is its holiness, that is its connection to Christ. Therefore the bishops remind the Church, and one another as members of that Church, that "penance, prayer, adoration, sacrifice, self-giving, charity and justice" contribute to the church's holiness and thereby to its credibility as an actor in a world that is increasingly secularized and inhospitable to the Gospel, indeed to religious sentiments and aspirations generally. The message: let us all recommit ourselves to the religious mission of the Church.

The sources of life for the Church are Scripture, tradition, the teaching office of the Church (its magisterium) and, last but not least, the liturgy. Here the synod's Final Report reaffirms the centrality of each and all of these resources for sustaining and strengthening the Church's credibility as sign and sacrament of Christ's presence in and love for the world. The Report has little to say, however, about the problems that arise in reconciling just how those sources are indeed to nourish the Church today. The most ticklish problem is that of the relationship between the bishops' teaching responsibilities and the work of theologians. While the Report identifies this as a problem area, there is no comment about how it might be resolved creatively—only the comment that the faithful become confused by theologians' arguing. While it would be unfair to expect a document of this nature to propose a program to harmonize the pursuit of theology with the bishops' concern for stability in the Church, it is important to remember that theologians and bishops in some areas are collaborating on that issue. In the United States, the Bishops' Conference and the Catholic Theological Society of America and the Canon Law Society have been discussing a procedure for dealing with just such conflicts. The Synod's call for a universal catechism, intended to establish the guidelines or parameters for any efforts at catechism—created by regions of the Church, is included in this section.

This section of the Report says little about the effective proclamation of the Gospel and the celebration of the Eucharist and other rites of the Church, save for the suggestion that "future priests should learn liturgical life in a practical way and know liturgical theology well." One wonders if the bishops think that all that is necessary for the liturgical life of the church is now in place throughout the world. In the United States alone, a recent report on the state of Catholic parish life, conducted by the University of Notre Dame with grants from the Lilly Endowment, raises some troubling questions about the extent to which the liturgical reforms have been implemented and understood. Attendance at a moribund liturgy raises equally troubling questions.

The Report's section on the church as communion is the most complicated of the four sections because it relates directly to aspects of post-Vatican II Catholic life which have been particularly controversial. The basic stance of the Synod, however, strongly reaffirms the biblical notion of koinonia or communion as the central symbol for understanding the Church's internal life, what theologians traditionally have called Church order. At the very beginning of this section, the document distinguishes between this foundational biblical symbol, which is expressed in and nourished by Church members' communion in the sacraments, especially of Baptism and Eucharist, Pope John Paul II chats with John Cordinal Krol, of Philadelphia, who served as co-president of the Extraordinary Synod of Bishops, held in Rome last November 24-December 8.

and approaches which concentrate only on the organizational dimension of the Church. However, the bishops then proceed to identify five areas of Church life which impinge directly upon the actual organization and structure of Roman Catholicism: unity and pluriformity—the tensions caused by cultural and theological diversity, collegiality or collaborative leadership, the role of national or regional conferences of bishops, participation and co-responsibility—especially regarding the role of lay women and men, ecumenical communion. In each of the areas identified in the Final Report, the Church—the whole community and not just the bishops—confronts a difficult question about how, in this concrete area, the foundational communion will be embodied in some structure, in some form of lay ministry, in some form of ecumenical cooperation. Again it is unrealistic to expect more from this document than it could possibly deliver, given the limits of time surrounding its development. Nevertheless, this need to confront the concrete implications of the Synod's priorities, as with the priorities of Vatican II before it, will inevitably entail differences of opinion and even controversy in the Catholic community. It may be that there will be less controversy than over the past twenty years; it may be that there will be more. The issues which the bishops identify but skirt are potentially explosive—especially the role of women and the role of bishops' conferences. One might have hoped for a word here about the need to accept conflict within the Church. Surely that capacity to accept conflict without breaking communion will be a major challenge for all the members of the Church in both the near and distant future.

The final section of the Report deals with the Church's mission in the world, a world filled with the poor and shared with non-Christian religions as well as with many unbelievers. It is in this world that the Church is called to be sign and sacrament of God's saving love incarnated in Jesus. A basic attitude of respect for and openness to the non-Christian religions and unbelievers is called for, just as it was at Vatican II. The Synod also strongly affirms Vatican II's desire to be in effective solidarity with this world and especially with the plight of the poor and the oppressed. Consequently the Synod speaks in terms that have become familiar because of the tremendous influence exerted by the church and theologians from Latin America: the Church, in all lands and peoples, should demonstrate a preferential option for the poor and for human promotion that overcomes economic poverty, the lack of freedom, poor education and all that degrades the human spirit.

The same tone that recognizes that the world today is a very different world from that of 1965 also emerges in this final section, as it did in the opening section on the Church as mystery. Although the fundamental position of the bishops is consistent with Vatican II's openness and even hopefulness about the modern world, there is a note of religious or theological realism which comes out in the references to the theology of the Cross. What the document seems to intend here is a reminder of the basic Christian insight, that both Cross and Resurrection compose the Paschal event. As a result, Christians can expect suffering, misunderstanding, even persecution for the sake of their faith in Jesus and for their convictions about the promotion of justice and solidarity with the poor. While that suffering is confusing, painful and even potentially threatening to faith, it is ultimately linked to the Resurrection and to the fulfillment of faith, hope and love.

Throughout this summary of the Synod's Final Report, one word, which figured quite prominently in the report itself, has been omitted—Secularism. At several points, especially in the first and last sections, the document mentions the secularism in the world today as a major impediment to religion and particularly to Catholic Christianity. What the bishops mean by secularism is not always easy to determine. They seem to be identifying the tendency in the modern world to reject religious insight into human experience in favor of a perspective which sees human persons as autonomous, from one another and finally from God as well. That autonomy strikes the bishops as inimical and dangerous to religious belief and practice. Such an attitude, to the extent that it exists in modern societies, does seem potentially lethal to religion. However, the Church's best response is the indirect one of "being the church"—that is being the communion of persons united by faith in Christ as the revelation of God's love, being prayerful, penitent, self-sacrificing loving and just. The threat of secularism is real enough, but the Church's response is also equally real, if also very traditional. There is a kind of humility required of the Catholic Church in this sense: the humility to accept a condition of some poverty in the hope so that its witness as sign and sacrament of God's love will shine forth strongly in the lives and convictions of its members.

After the Synod

In comparison with the tremendous press coverage prior to the Synod, relatively little has been written and reported after the meeting. Some of that reporting has been quite humorous. The New York Times, in what seemed to be a journalistic coup, had obtained a Latin copy of the Final Report and printed it in translation in its Sunday edition. What passed for a translation was an almost word-for-word rendering of the text without attention to matters of sense, sentence construction and style. Readers of the Sunday edition who would remember translating Caesar from an interlinear translation (or pony) can recall the humorous inadequacies of such an approach.

Little has been written largely because the Synod did not prove to be the showdown between liberals and conservatives that pre-synod speculation had suggested. The Pope apparently meant what he had been saying all along: that Vatican II was the fundamental event of the contemporary Church and of his own ministry as pope. Cardinal Ratzinger probably retained his own opinions, as they were expressed in his book, but was not able to convince a majority of the bishops assembled to accept his reading of the signs of the times. This is not to say that there was no conflict within the chambers which housed the Synod. However, the rule of secrecy prevented the news media from getting the story out, save for drawing some inferences about the decision to publish the full Final Report, rather than submitting it to Pope John Paul for consideration and his own selection for reporting. Conflict would have been news; agreement was not.

Does this silence, in both the secular news media and in the religious press, signal that the Synod is of little importance for ordinary Catholics around the world? The answer to that question is no! The Synod of 1985 was an important event, but its importance is not such that its decisions will have an immediate and direct impact in the pews of parish churches in the United States and around the world. For the Synod to produce such immediate and direct results would require a return to a pre-Vatican II vision of the Church as primarily a bureaucracy run from the top down. And the Synod did not return to a bureaucratic understanding of the Church, but chose rather to reaffirm the notion of Church as communion in the following of Jesus, nourished by the sacraments, the Scriptures, the Church's leaders and the holy lives of its members.

And therein lies the importance of this Synod and its review of Vatican II. Confronted with the contradictory expectations of liberals and conservatives, the Synod chose neither extreme but instead reaffirmed the achievements of Vatican II based on its perception that the council had indeed enriched the life of the Church as a communion—in parishes and small communities around the world, as well as in the meetings of bishops called Synods and the other collegial elements that Vatican II introduced into the experience of the Catholic Church. The very fact that this Synod did not try to resolve all of today's tensions by administrative decisions signals that the bishops themselves appreciate that the process of understanding and living out the impact of Vatican II is continuing and needs to continue throughout the worldwide Catholic Church. ■

CORAZON AQUINO'S

By Mark J. Ratkus, Ph.D., '69

s well as I can pin it down, my own personal and academic interest in the Philippines goes back to 1962 when, as an idealistic high school student, I listened avidly to the tales spun by Brother Athanasius Francis of the Christian Brothers' New York District, a visiting sphere of a missionary from the Islands. His accounts of the squalor experienced by Filipinos as well as the lack of opportunity they faced struck me as being unfair and unnecessary. Though I didn't recognize it at the time, I was being challenged to understand the situation better so that some day I might be able to make a contribution toward changing that bleak picture.

Subsequently, I read anything about the Philippines I could find. A study of the country was a natural paper topic for my Senior Seminar in Economic Development at La Salle under Dr. Joseph Mooney. Once at Notre Dame, I focused my graduate studies to emphasize Philippine topics. Eventually, with doctorate in hand and with several years of teaching experience logged, I was able finally to go to the Republic of the Philippines from 1979 to 1981 to teach at La Salle College—Bacolod City (La Salle University's "twin school") and to see what I could learn from living there.

Of the people, I remember a number of traits that are salient enough to be characterized as cultural touchstones. Pre-eminent is their warm and gracious hospitality whose practice among poor Filipinos calls to mind the selflessness of the Gospel's widow giving her last mite. Another is the mild patience with which Filipinos appear to approach difficulties, even tragedies. This, of course, is a quality enhanced by the harsh economic realities facing at least two-thirds of the population.

Reflecting on my experiences will, I hope, help people in the U.S. make better sense of the recent turmoil in the Philippines which led, felicitously, to a peaceful transfer of power to President Corazon C. Aquino, widow of the martyred Senator Benigno "Ninoy" Aquino. Many have asked me whether all of this has come as a surprise. Without wanting to sound ambivalent, I nonetheless feel compelled to say "yes" and "no" in response.

On the surprising side, the recent turn-of-events occurred despite the fact that, during Ferdinand Marcos' twenty-year rule, he gradually consolidated his power through a system of incentives that made many beholden to him alone. For example, the political and economic influence of traditionally powerful families was replaced by that of Marcos' cronies, who in effect became les nouveaux riches. # ENORMOUS CHALLENGE

By Robert S. Lyons, Jr.

Although her nation has undoubtedly turned the corner following years of turmoil and oppression, Philippine President Corazon Aquino still faces enormous economic, psychological, and political challenges, according to a La Salle University administrator who spent ten years in Manila.

"The economy and the perception of fairness—evenhandedness," are the key elements," says Brother Paul Scheiter, F.S.C., Ph.D., who taught physics and religion at De La Salle University in the Philippines from 1966 to 1976. "As in many developing countries with a few very rich and powerful people and a large number of poor, almost powerless people, Mrs. Aquino faces the whole problem of trying to get a middle class developed."

Brother Paul says that Mrs. Aquino's lack of political experience could be an asset as she attempts to unify a Southeastern Asian nation of 55 million people living on 7,100 islands comprising an archipelago slightly larger than the state of Nevada. Because she has no previous political ties, the new Filipino president doesn't owe her position to anybody.

"It was also fortunate that Mrs. Aquino was able to work out a deal with (vice president) Salvador Laurel," Scheiter added. "If those two people had been split, Marcos would have won the election easily without having to rely on fraud. Now much depends on how faithful Laurel will be to Aquino from a political standpoint. It also remains to be seen how loyal (Defense Minister Juan Ponce) Enrile will be considering that he had been Marcos' right-hand man."

Brother Paul says that Mrs. Aquino appears to have appointed a solid cabinet with competent, experienced people. "But much of her success will depend on the deputies they pick and how well they run their offices," he explained. "Keep in mind, also, that many people who belonged to the Marcos machine are still serving as mayors and government officials out in the provinces. We have to see how that works out."

Brother Paul arrived in the Philippines in August, 1966, shortly after Marcos was elected president. Relative calm prevailed for the first few years, he recalls, although there were occasional strong feelings expressed for nationalism and economic independence by students. During the U.S.-Vietnam war, Marcos had sent some Philippine Army engineers to build highways and bridges in Vietnam. Manila experienced many protests about the Vietnam war, U.S. government and corporate dominance over the Philippines, and local problems like prices, wages, and transit fares. In some ways the protests were would have been instructive to even Richard Daley of Chicago, and it gave him the opportunity during the Martial Law period (9/21/72-1/17/81) to “legally” change the Constitution in ways that both made his word supreme and extended his stay in office. Finally, the increased role of the military had become so institutionalized under Martial Law that its formal lifting in early 1981 evinced no discernible change. The Armed Forces remained available and loyal to Ferdinand Marcos.

The erosion of support for Mr. Marcos' Administration was similar to its entrenchment in one respect: both were gradual processes. From my vantage point on Negros Island of the Visayas (the central portion of the Philippines) I saw varied segments of the population become disaffected from the regime. On the one hand were the rich sugar planters of our area whose incomes were diminished greatly by forced sales at low prices to the Marcos-instituted Marketing Monopoly. They wouldn't dare say anything to me “on the record” for fear that word would get out to Ambassador Roberto “Bobby” Benedicto, “Sugar Baron” and Marcos' crony, who had influence over the allocation of crop loans. Incidentally, while my original plans for the stint in Bacolod were to conduct a statistical study of the ailing sugar industry, this became de facto impossible, but I did learn much about the political economy of Sugarlandia as a result!

“The Harvard and Yale of the Philippines”

The Christian Brothers have enjoyed a strong presence in the Philippines since 1911 when Vatican authorities asked them to open up a school to accommodate English-speaking students. Other religious orders like the Augustinians and Dominicans had been there previously, but they offered a Spanish influence since the Philippines had formerly been a colony of that nation until the Spanish-American War.

De La Salle University opened in 1911 and the Brothers eventually taught elementary, high school, and college courses on that campus. During World War II, the Japanese Army used the school as its headquarters while the Brothers continued living on the second floor. The Brothers and the Japanese lived in relative peaceful coexistence until the American forces entered Manila in February, 1944. Then the Japanese soldiers went berserk, killing 16 Brothers and 20 Filipinos, most of them in the chapel where visitors can still see blood stains on the tile floor.

The Brothers opened a second college in Bacolod, 300 miles south of Manila, in 1950. Today, they operate seven schools throughout the Islands. Similar to the Big Five, in Philadelphia, De La Salle University wages a fierce athletic and academic rivalry with Ateneo University, a Jesuit institution located in a Manila suburb. The two colleges are considered the “Harvard and Yale of the Philippines” and have traditionally carried on a torrid basketball rivalry that has been as hotly-contested as any contest waged by their Philadelphia counterparts. The University of Philippines, a state institution, also has an excellent academic and athletic reputation.

Despite the strong athletic rivalries, there has been a long tradition of fine cooperation in academics. In 1965, De La Salle, Ateneo, and U.P. started a joint project with Harvard, funded by the Ford Foundation, to develop part-time evening MBA degree programs. These programs prospered and in 1975, De La Salle and Ateneo jointly-founded the Asian Institute of Management for full-time MBA study and research. De La Salle is, also, in many other consortia with other universities in the Philippines and other Asian countries.

copies of what was happening around the world at the time. Some of the protests were organized by Communists, who still comprise a small, but radical challenge to Mrs. Aquino's government today.

"In those days," recalls Brother Paul, "it would get on my nerves whenever I heard our students chanting or carrying (placards with) anti-American slogans. The press was also quite free-wheeling and extreme in both directions and, at times, irresponsible. But that was the cost of having a free press. You'd get a bit of slant to the news."

Then, during the night of Friday, September 22, 1972, Marcos smoothly and quietly imposed Martial Law. He quickly rounded up many of his political opponents and put them in jail. He imposed a night time curfew and silenced the news media.

"I woke up that Saturday morning and turned on the radio to get some music," recalls Brother Paul. "There was nothing at all. No newspapers came out that day. I called the U.S. Embassy and they said, 'No comment!' I got a shortwave radio tuned to Australia and that's where I heard that Marcos had imposed Martial Law. Finally, at about 4 P.M., Marcos came on television and explained what he had done."

Although schools were not permitted to reopen for another two or three weeks, and the mass media offered only the official party line after it resumed operation, Brother Paul says that Martial Law worked pretty well for the first year or so. "Marcos got rid of a good deal of corruption, cut down on the drug situation, and rounded up a lot of loose guns," he explained. "But then the government sent spies posing as students into the schools. You had to be very careful what you said in class or in public. You could only confer with close friends in your office."

Gradually, there was a change in the popular perception of Marcos. "From the first days I was there, you'd always here complaints from people about corruption," Brother Paul says. "After a year of Martial Law, around 1974, you would hear stories about Marcos taking care of his friends in the Army. Other friends were given favorable business deals like the person who got the contract for Toyota factory south of Manila.

"Some technocrats tried to do good jobs, but they got frustrated as payoffs started going to selected friends. As time went on, people got more and more discouraged. The economic situation was getting worse. In recent years, they've had negative economic growth. National policy-makers played around with the national economy, banking system, and debt and the country had serious inflation. Poor people were getting squeezed. There were wage freezes. Unions and strikes were declared illegal. The price of food was going up. It cost more to ride the bus. There were complaints about fiscal mismanagement in the banks, in processing loans, things like that."

Although Brother Paul feels that there is even more of a separation of Church and State in the Philippines than in the United States, he was not surprised that the Roman Catholic Church took such an active role in the recent political situation. "People in theology at the bigger universities in Manila, like De La Salle or Ateneo, were up to date on Vatican II," Brother Paul explained. "They were familiar with 'Liberation Theology'—maybe not some of the interpretations you find down in Latin America—but there was a good bit of writing and spirituality emphasizing the practical application of the Gospel." Brother Paul recalls that a few parish parties, nuns and religious in the Philippines started hearing about abuses by some of Marcos' friends in the military a number of years ago. Priests would hear about parishioners being tortured in prison and would pass the information on to their bishops who would try to talk to Marcos. "Some bishops knew exactly what was going on and saw that it was something to complain about," says Brother Paul. "Others who were allied with those who were in power didn't want to rock the boat. You had this split between those who were critical of the adminis-

On the other hand, the rural poor of Negros had had virtually no contact with typical government because there were no roads, no schools, no health care extension programs. However, under the auspices of the Diocese of Bacolod and its energetic Bishop, Msgr. Antonio Y. Fortich, local clergy and the Columbian Fathers had begun to minister to the people's material and spiritual needs via the development of Basic Christian Communities, which emphasized local empowerment and self-reliant approaches to problems. Soon though, local politicians began to harass in various ways the communities' members, even to the point of killing many, in order to intimidate the people back into subservience. They did this with the use of Philippine Constabulary Long-Range Patrol Units, which were placed locally to hunt down "subversives," but who more often served as a private army to advance the position of municipal leaders. Thus, even the rural poor had experienced the effects of autocratic rule, and in their own way became lost to the Marcos side.

Finally, the linchpin in the whole series of events that led to Marcos' ouster occurred on August 21, 1983 when the popular opposition leader, "Ninoy" Aquino, was gunned-down on the tarmac of Manila International Airport as he arrived from the U.S. to try to talk President Marcos into adopting reform measures. The international outcry was so great and prolonged that the President empaneled a 5-member Board of Inquiry, the Agrava Commission (named for its head, Justice Corazon Agrava.) Four of their members found, in a heartening display of courage, that the assassination was the result of a military conspiracy of roughly 25 high-ranking officers. When these men, including General Fabian Ver (Chief of Staff and third-cousin of the President) were acquitted on December 2, 1985, reaction at home and abroad to the whitewash was swift.

Under pressure from Washington, Marcos called for a "snap election" in February (his 6-year term would've run to 1987) to demonstrate that he still had the mandate of the people. Amazingly, the opposition unified behind the charismatic Cory Aquino and her running-mate, Senator Salvador "Doy" Laurel, a seasoned legislator. When the National Movement for Free Elections (=NAMFREL, one of whose main organizers is Brother Rolando Dizon, president of La Salle High School in suburban Greenhills) tally failed to corroborate that of the official Commission on Elections, the warnings of U.S. Senator Richard Lugar and other observers about election fraud came to be covered extensively by the U.S. news media. Finally, under the threat of arrest by Marcos, Acting Chief of Staff Fidel Ramos and the Minister of Defense, Juan Ponce Enrile, rebelled by seizing on February 22 Camps Aguinaldo and Crame in suburban Manila, which provided the impetus for many military men, demoralized by the acquittal of Ver and the others, to join the opposition. Subsequent events are fairly well known, so let's examine challenges facing both the Philippines and the U.S.

The departure of Marcos did nothing to change the basic fact of life in the Philippines: most of the population is desperately poor, with yearly per capita income estimated at roughly $350. Depressed world prices for most of its export crops, notably sugar, plagued the economy during the late 70s and early 80s. The energy crisis of that decade also harmed the tration and those who said, 'let's be quiet and don't say anything.'"

As time went on, more of the abuses of the Marcos regime came to light and more bishops realized that they had to take a stand. Although some religious urged their colleagues, 'Let's not get involved. We shouldn't be saying anything about this. Let the politicians work it out,' very few religious leaders remained in Marcos' corner.

"At De La Salle we didn't have much of a split among the Brothers or the faculty," says Brother Paul. "But at another university, I think they suffered a considerable division on their campus because one or two of their men were the confessors to Mr. and Mrs. Marcos. On one occasion, a fund-raising project to raise money for scholarships to that university, Mrs. Marcos went out to put a squeeze on a lot of companies and businessmen. You know, 'You make sure you contribute a few thousand pesos to the scholarship fund.' The people who had the money had no choice. Otherwise, they would have had their businesses cut from under them. But they did resent that sort of thing. So did some people at that university."

Brother Paul, who now teaches a course in computer science at La Salle, in Philadelphia, and directs the university's Institutional Research office, says that the decade he spent in the Philippines was an invaluable experience, primarily because it gave him the opportunity to look at the United States from the outside. "I really got a much deeper appreciation of agricultural and industrial sectors. During the same period, the nation's foreign debt rose rapidly, so that today its magnitude is approximately $30 billion.

Despite its protestations to the contrary, the Marcos regime focused its expenditures on urban areas, particularly the National Capital Region. Therefore, effecting a shift toward the rural areas, where the vast majority of the population lives, is the main developmental task confronting Mrs. Aquino's Administration. Clearly, there were no "trickle-down" benefits to the nation-at-large of the massive public capital expenditures in Manila. In fact, there was quite the opposite effect. Thus, there needs to be a direct decentralization geographically of economic activity. Of course, this will not be an easy nor a quickly-completed task, but an ancillary advantage of such an effort would be to stem the flow of migrants to Manila, whose social services are already strained severely.

Besides the need to decentralize the economy geographically, the government will have to take the lead in helping it to diversify both items it produces for export and for local consumption. The former is necessary to make the economy less susceptible to the instability inherent in dependence on a small number of export products. The latter is essential because effective demand for a wider range of products and services to meet domestic needs is precluded currently by low household incomes.

While the support of the U.S. in the pursuit of these objectives would be most helpful, many in this country wonder how receptive the new government will be regarding the continuing U.S. military presence at Clark Air Base and the Subic Bay Naval Station when the Bases Agreement expires in 1991. With Marcos gone, one of the main sources of Philippines discontent with the Bases has abated if not disappeared altogether. That is, critics of Marcos had claimed that the military hardware he received from the U.S. as part of the yearly rental payments was being used to suppress Filipino dissidents. The widespread, human rights abuses, documented by both Church personnel and Amnesty International, corroborated this contention. Now that a credible government is in place—with Washington playing a crucial role in distancing itself from its previous support of Marcos—it appears quite possible that the two countries can work out mutually-acceptable terms for an extension of the current agreement. However, it would not be surprising if Filipinos restricted the U.S. to deploying only non-nuclear weapons in the Islands because many feel that the presence of nuclear armaments would actually lessen the Philippines' security which the Bases are supposed to enhance.

Surely the problems facing the Philippines in the wake of the Marcos-era are formidable. Yet its resources—particularly its diligent and patient people—are available for the task. While no new government is ever guaranteed success, President Aquino's plans for the future, coupled with the support of all strata of Philippine society for her Administration's efforts, herald the dawn of renewed hope in a country gripped for so long by cynicism.

For one who cares so deeply about her land and people, I prayerfully wish her 'Godspeed!' ■ things like the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the Bill of Rights," he says. "Especially under Martial Law when we had government spies as students and strict control of the mass media. Most Americans are not aware of their basic freedoms."

Brother Paul also feels that many Americans have a stereotyped image that people who live in developing countries find themselves in chaotic political or economic situations because they are lazy or uneducated. "In reality, these people are certainly not less educated than Americans," Brother Paul explained. "In fact, Filipinos have a tremendous thirst for education. It's unbelievable! It's my impression that there is a higher literacy rate among the Filipinos than you find here in the U.S. And they are hard working. Most Americans don't realize that these people are victims of historical developments, international power plays, and international economic policies."

Filipinos, according to Brother Paul, have mixed emotions about the American presence in their country—primarily the large Air Force and Navy Bases. "It's a love-hate relationship right now," he says. "Older Filipinos remember World War II and look upon America as the 'great protector,' whereas to the younger people, 'it's a foreign country which has a big plot of land of ours.'"

"It's just as if the British still owned the Philadelphia Navy Yard," says Brother Paul. "We Americans wouldn't like that." ■

AROUND CAMPUS

University Introduces New Graduate Program in Management

La Salle will offer a new Master of Science Degree Program in Organization and Management beginning in September. Courses in the new program will be offered on weekday evenings and Saturday mornings on La Salle's main campus at 20th st. and Olney ave. Some courses will also be available at La Salle's center city site in Franklintown, at 17th st. and Benjamin Franklin Parkway.

Gregory Bruce, the university's director of graduate business programs, said that the new Organization and Management program is intended as an alternative to La Salle's traditional MBA program for those people who are seeking a more specialized education in the field of management, specifically in organizational behavior and organizational science. The program would be ideal for those desiring to enter the field of management consulting or human resource management professionals.

"The program is really designed for middle level managers and technical people who basically want to stay with their present organization, but who want to become more effective managers," explained Bruce. "It's intended for engineers, physicists, chemists and others who possibly have other graduate degrees, but who want to sharpen their managerial skills."

Bruce emphasized that La Salle's new Graduate Program in Organization and Management is not a substitute or a shortcut for the traditional MBA program.

The MBA program is much more generalized," Bruce added. "The MBA is really designed for people who want to move up in their profession. La Salle's Graduate Management program focuses specifically on the behavioral aspects of management. It's designed, for example, for persons in the non-profit or government sectors who need the managerial skills but have less need for certain analytical and functional components of the MBA degree."

Bruce explained that business in America has gradually been shifting from a heavy industry-based economy to a service and information-based economy. This has created an increased need for managers in the private and public sectors to develop skills to motivate people, to lead and work in groups, to develop new leadership styles, to communicate effectively both orally and in writing, to effectively interact with others, and to make decisions in ambiguous situations.

"In short," Bruce added, "today's managers exist in more complex organizations that are people intensive rather than capital intensive and require increased behavioral knowledge and expertise."

La Salle's M.S. in Organization and Management program will consist of 12 graduate level courses. In addition to four courses in Management Foundation, students will be able to choose an elective concentration corresponding to a chosen career path. These concentrations include Human Resource Management, Organizational Development, Corporate Strategy, Association Management, Non-Profit Management, or a self-developed track.

Dr. Joseph Seltzer, chairman of La Salle's Management Department, worked in conjunction with Bruce in developing the new graduate program.

Applications are now being accepted. Men and women interested in La Salle's Master of Science Degree Program in Organization and Management are urged to write or call the Director, Graduate Business Admissions, La Salle University, Philadelphia, PA 19141. Telephone: (215) 951-1059.

Four new members have been elected to La Salle University's Board of Trustees, it was announced by Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D.

The new trustees bring the total membership of the board to 33 including 11 members of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, the teaching order that conducts the 123-year-old university.

The new members are Brother Thomas Caldwell, F.S.C., provincial of the Christian Brothers; Henry G. DeVincent, M.D., '56, senior attending surgeon at Holy Redeemer Hospital, Meadowbrook, Pa.; Elmer F. Hansen, Jr., '58, president of Hansen Properties, Ambler, Pa., and Brother Joseph Mahon, F.S.C., '62, auxiliary visitor and director of education for the Baltimore Province of the Christian Brothers.

Brother Caldwell, a native of Pittsburgh, has been principal at Philadelphia's West Catholic High School, Central Catholic High School, in Canton, Ohio, and Hudson Catholic High School, Jersey City, N.J. He has also taught or served in administrative capacities at La Salle High School, Philadelphia, and Central Catholic High School, Pittsburgh.

A Phi Beta Kappa graduate of The Catholic University of America, Brother Caldwell designed and became the first director of the Baltimore Province's Aspirancy Program in 1971. He became coordinator of the Brother's initial formation program and director of admissions at St. Gabriel's Hall, Phoenixville, Pa., in 1976 and served in both capacities until his election to a three year term as provincial, last July.

Dr. DeVincent is the former chief of orthopedic surgery at Holy Redeemer Hospital. A graduate of Temple University Medical School, he is a Diplomate of American Board of Orthopedic Surgery, a Fellow of American College of Surgeons, and Fellow of Inter-American College of Physicians and Surgeons. A member of La Salle University's Alumni Hall of Athletics, Dr. DeVincent played professional baseball in the Cincinnati organization.

Hansen has been president of his own real estate development and general building construction firm since 1967, with primary emphasis on suburban office buildings in Montgomery County. Since 1984, he has been involved in investment banking and financial services. A former controller and assistant to the president of Fort Washington Industrial Park, he is a member of the Board of Directors of Montgomery County Industrial Development Corporation and La Salle High School.

Brother Mahon is the former principal at Archbishop Carroll High School, in Radnor, Pa., and Seton-La Salle High School, in Mount Lebanon, Pa. ## Challenge Grant Given By Atlantic Richfield

The Atlantic Richfield Foundation has awarded a $100,000 Program Development Challenge grant to La Salle University.

The grant, which must be matched by new alumni donors to the university by September 30, 1986, will be used to equip La Salle's science laboratories with new computers and other educational and scientific equipment for the Biology, Chemistry, Geology, and Physics Departments.

Brother President Patrick Ellis.

F.S.C., Ph.D., expressed sincere appreciation to the Atlantic Richfield Foundation for the grant. He explained that the university recently launched the $20 million Phase II of its "Campaign for the 80's," and hopes to generate increased corporate and foundation assistance while stimulating a substantially higher level of alumni support.

"By focusing on both of these priorities," Brother Ellis, added, "the Atlantic Richfield Foundation grant will have a significant, positive impact on the outcome of the Campaign, and will directly enhance the academic and fiscal vitality of the university for years to come."

Atlantic Richfield Foundation officials explained to La Salle's president that they are "increasingly concerned by the relatively low level of alumni support at many universities at the very time many of these institutions are seeking increased corporate and foundation support." The "challenge" provision was added to La Salle's grant in an effort to communicate their concern while stimulating an increase in the number and percentage of alumni who contribute to La Salle University.

Brother Claude Demitras

A Fine Teacher, a Dedicated Administrator, and a Friend

Mass of the Resurrection was sung on January 8 at La Salle University Chapel for Brother Gregory Claude Demitras, F.S.C., Ph.D., former dean of La Salle's Evening Division, who died on January 4 at Germantown Hospital. He was 56.

Brother Claude, as he was known to hundreds of students, had been a teacher and administrator at La Salle for almost 20 years. He joined the university's Chemistry Department in 1965 and carried the academic rank of professor of chemistry. A recipient of a Lindback Award for distinguished teaching, he served as dean of the university's Evening Division from 1977 to 1984. At one time he also directed the university's Honors Center.

"Brother Claude slipped away quietly before we had fully adjusted to the reality that he was surely going," said Brother President Emeritus Daniel Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., at Brother Claude's Mass of the Resurrection. "For the courage of his last months had kept from us the full extent of the illness now mercifully behind him. But he remains vividly with us still, a man who looms large in our consciousness because of his big heart, his warm laughter, his ample fulfillment of the ideal of the Brother as friend.

"We know that with him we lose a fine teacher with a special gift of befriending his students and a La Sallian concern for the neediest among them; an administrator totally dedicated to his work—and more forthright at times that he realized; a convivial soul who brought a great variety of interests and skills to the life of the Community; a loving son and brother—and a friend to so many beyond his family circle that we cannot number them all. But we know, too, that he has only gone ahead to the heavenly banquet where, as said Thomas More, we shall all be gathered to be merry once again and forever."

A member of the Brothers of the Christian Schools since 1945, Brother Claude taught chemistry, mathematics, and religion at Philadelphia's La Salle High School from 1953 to 1961 where he also served as coach of the tennis team and moderator of the crew. He also taught at Trinity High School, in Shiremanstown (outside Harrisburg) in 1964-65.

Brother Claude was a native of Pittsburgh. He earned a bachelor's degree in chemistry-education from La Salle in 1952, a master's degree in theology from La Salle in 1953, and master's and Ph.D. degree in chemistry from the University of Pennsylvania in 1960 and 1965, respectively.

Well-known for his writing and research in chemistry, Brother Claude was the author of a half-dozen textbooks and laboratory manuals. He was a member of the American Chemical Society, the American Institute of Chemists, and New York Academy of Science. He also spent a year doing chemical research at Cornell University in 1976-77 and another year on research leave at the University of Pennsylvania in 1984-85.

Brother Claude is survived by his mother, Mrs. Mary Demitras, of Pittsburgh, and two brothers, Richard, of Canton, Pa., and Raymond, of Monroeville, Pa.

He was buried at the Christian Brothers Cemetery, in Ammendale, Md.

In response to his concern to offer financial assistance to deserving La Salle men and women, The Brother Claude Demitras Memorial Scholarship Fund has been established. To date, 61 donors have contributed $3,590 to the Fund. Contributions may be sent to the Annual Fund Office at the University.

Lefty Ervin Resigns as Men's Basketball Coach; Speedy Morris Appointed

Dave "Lefty" Ervin, head coach of men's basketball at La Salle since 1979, resigned from that position on March 7 and was replaced two weeks later by Bill "Speedy" Morris, who has served as head coach of the university's women's court varsity for the past two years.

"This is a most difficult decision for me," said Ervin at a press conference at Hayman Hall, "but I believe my resignation is best for all concerned. No one was more disappointed than myself, my staff and the players with the ending of our season. I know that we were very close to being a very good team this season. I believe that this team will become a very good team next year, and I'm sorry that I won't be a part of it.

"I am a La Salle alumnus, and will remain a loyal alumnus. I have always given this school my best, and appreciate what it has given me. I wish the players well, and will follow their La Salle careers closely."

Ervin had a 119-87 record in seven years at La Salle, ranking behind Ken Loeffler (145 wins in six seasons) and Paul Westhand (142, nine seasons) in coaching victories at La Salle. He replaced Westhead as coach in August, 1979, and led his first team to a 22-8 record, East Coast Conference Championships and the NCAA Tournament behind College Basketball Player-of-the-Year Michael Brooks. His 1983 team won another ECC Championship and defeated Boston University, 70-58, in an opening round NCAA Tournament game. La Salle's first NCAA victory since 1955. His 1984 team had a 20-11 record, tied for the regular-season championship of the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference and played in the National Invitational Tournament.

Ervin's last two teams had a combined 29-27 record, and was eliminated in the first round of the MAAC Championship Tournament each season.

"This has been very difficult for everyone at La Salle," said Bill Bradshaw, Director of Athletics. "I consider Lefty a friend, and will remain so."

"I wish Lefty all the best," said Brother President Patrick Ellis. "He has always conducted himself with professionalism and class, and has done so today. We have always been able to communicate with each other, and we will continue to do so."

Morris, one of the most successful and best-known boys' high school basketball coaches in the country before becoming the Explorers' women's coach in August, 1984, is the 16th head coach of men's basketball at La Salle. His women's teams had a two-year record of 43-17, winning the Metro Atlantic Conference Championship Tournament and an NCAA Tournament bid this season.

"Mr. Morris has certainly proven himself an exceptional basketball coach throughout his career," said Brother Patrick. "In his two years at La Salle, he has continued to be that, and has shown that he is also an excellent teacher of young people. I believe that this is a positive step for the university."

"We wanted the best coach for our men's team" said Bill Bradshaw, director of athletics. "After a great deal of thought, we realized we would not have to look beyond our offices for that person. The best coach for La Salle was already here."

"Every basketball coach wants to become a head coach of a Division I team," said Morris. "La Salle offered me that opportunity two years ago by asking me to coach the women's team. I've enjoyed my two seasons with those players. They proved to me that women athletes are as talented as men, and are willing to work to become better players. I've learned much from them, and I hope they've learned from me.

"La Salle has now offered me a second opportunity to coach a Division I basketball team. I appreciate this faith in my abilities, and I will work as hard as I always have to continue the La Salle tradition of great basketball."

Morris' 1984-1985 Explorers had a 22-8 record, and set 13 school team or individual records for one season or one game, including victories in one season. His 1985-86 team finished its season with a 21-9 record, and set six school or individual records. Three seniors, Linda Hester, Jill Crandley and Suzi McCaffrey each scored her 1000th career point, and Crandley is an honorable mention Academic All-American.

Morris began his coaching career at Philadelphia's Roman Catholic High School in 1967. In 14 seasons, his teams had an overall record of 347-82, won six Philadelphia Catholic League Championships, one Philadelphia City Championship, two National Catholic Tournament titles, and four times won better than 30 games in one season.

He coached at the William Penn Charter School during the 1983 and 1984 seasons, winning the Interacademic League Championship in 1984, and compiling an overall record of 40-14. In 16 years as a boys high school coach, Morris' teams had a combined record of 387-96, an average of better than 24 wins per season.

Morris is the first person to become head coach of a men's Division I basketball team after being a head coach of a Division I women's basketball team.

A native of Philadelphia, Speedy, 43, and his wife Mimi reside in Manayunk, with their four children, Keith, Brian, Margaret Mary and Christopher.

John J. McCann: Mixing French and Fiction

What is a French teacher doing writing fiction? That's a question John J. McCann, '57, associate professor of French at La Salle, has been asked more than once in the last few years. His response is usually a resounding, "Working very hard and loving it!"

McCann, who has taught French language and literature at La Salle since 1963, is not only writing fiction, he's getting it published as well. In fact, within the last five years he has had his first seven short stories published in such literary quarterlies and reviews as Hawaii Review, North Dakota Quarterly, and Wisconsin Review. In addition, he is now working on the second draft of his first novel, TO FAITHFUL WARRIORS, which he hopes to complete by 1987.

But, according to McCann, a French teacher writing fiction isn't quite as unusual as it seems. "I started writing poetry as a child and then wanted to study theater," he recalled. "In college I was an English major, but was fascinated by the French writers, so I switched my major to French."

After college, McCann went on to teach French in area high schools before coming to La Salle and eventually pursuing post graduate degrees in French. He has written reviews and such in the past, but writing fiction has become a new and exciting challenge at this time in his career.

"I'm still interested in writing poetry, and writing and directing plays, but right now I really want to concentrate on fiction," McCann explained. "It's exciting, especially the novel. I'm interested in seeing how far I can go with my writing. I've got this vision that I want to share with people. How well the novel can pull it off is how well I can craft it."

TO FAITHFUL WARRIORS deals with the last years of a native Philadelphian whose final days are spent in Israel where he dies at the hands of Arab terrorists in the disputed west bank city of Hebron. To aid McCann in completing this project he has received several writer-in-residence grants, including those at the Hambidge Center for the Arts, in Rabun Gap, Georgia; Ragdale Foundation, in Lake Forest, Illinois, and Doreland Mountain Center for the Arts, in Temecula, California. McCann will also travel to Israel in May to complete his research for TO FAITHFUL WARRIORS.

Like the main character in his novel, the characters in McCann's short stories are often based on some of his personal experiences and characteristics. "I go with the story," he said. "The story tells me what's next. But I find myself in all my stories. They're all autobiographical, it's a question of degree. Even when a writer creates new characters his understanding of them is framed in terms of who and what he is and his experiences."

McCann believes his experience as a fiction writer has helped make the literature courses he teaches better than ever. As a writer he has insight into what goes into writing and why writers do what they do. "I can talk to my students about that and they benefit from those experiences," the La Salle professor declared. "I love to teach, I love the classroom, and I love sharing what I'm learning, what I'm knowing."

"In my literature classes I try to teach my students that there is not a single way to interpret the text. They should read the text cohesively, not my way. Having students helps me to look at things from a different perspective. Students open up my mind."

So what does all this mean to a man who earned his master's and doctorate degrees in French from the University of Pennsylvania?

"It's something I always wanted to do, so I tried it," McCann explained. "I'm delighted that people take my work seriously. Whether or not I win prizes or get paid for it, I'm delighted. I've made some sacrifices to be able to write and I'd really like to someday be able to use this in special courses or something like that. I've just never done anything so hard in my life and loved it so much."

Dear Friend of La Salle University:

Through the extraordinary generosity and support of its many loyal benefactors, in 1985-86 La Salle University enjoyed its most successful fund-raising year ever, as gifts and grants totaled $7,126,205, a 66% increase over the previous record year. Alumni donors and contributions to the Annual Fund increased dramatically, as did corporate and foundation support for the University. The contributions of the several Christian Brothers' Communities continued to sustain the Christian Brothers' Scholarship Program, while the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania significantly upgraded its support for private higher education through a variety of new grant programs. As a result, La Salle has begun to generate the resources it critically needs to expand many of its finest academic programs, to renovate and restore several of its major facilities, and to increase its institutional commitment to faculty development and student financial aid.

Foremost among the year's many positive developments has been the recent decision by La Salle's principal benefactor to fund the entire $11 million cost of constructing a new library on the Southwest corner of the intersection of 20th Street and Olney Avenue. For the time being, the Board of Directors of the Foundation which has authorized this commitment has asked that the gift remain anonymous. Nevertheless, the Foundation's outstanding pledge of support has enabled us to move ahead with the most significant capital project in the institution's history, the building of a true "University" library which will enhance our many diverse academic programs and meet our students' needs well into the next century. Groundbreaking for the new library took place on June 9, 1986, and the entire facility should be completed and open in mid-1988.

On September 26, 1985, La Salle publicly announced Phase II of its Campaign for the 80's: Decade of Rededication and Renewal. Originally designed as a comprehensive effort to raise $20 million by the University's 125th Anniversary in 1988, Phase II is currently being restructured to reflect the commitment we have received for fully funding the new library. The end result of this process will be a much more streamlined effort on the order of $15-$16 million which will focus on the achievement of the other major capital priorities in the University's master plan (e.g. restoration and utilization of the Belfield estate; adaptation of the David Leo Lawrence Library, College Hall and the Wister Library Annex; construction of new recreational and athletic facilities, including an all-weather track, etc.), and the attainment of increased extramural support for endowed faculty development, endowed faculty chair(s), new academic programs (e.g. M.S. in Management, M.A. in Human Services Psychology), expanded community outreach activities and increased endowment.

At this juncture, I am pleased to report that we have already received gifts, grants and pledges in excess of $7 million toward the remaining priorities in Phase II of the Campaign for the 80's. The most significant of these are $1 million commitments from the Christian Brothers' Communities and John McShain. Additional foundation and corporate pledges/grants received since the start of Phase II include those from The Annenberg Fund, Atlantic Financial, The Atlantic Richfield Foundation, Beneficial Mutual Savings Bank, Central Penn National Bank, Cigna Foundation, E. I. DuPont de Nemours and Company, Fidelity Bank Trust, First Pennsylvania Bank, The Hunt Manufacturing Company Foundation, Industrial Valley Bank and Trust Company, The James S. Kemper Foundation, Samuel P. Mandell Foundation, Manufacturers Hanover Financial Services, Mellon Bank, Merck Company Foundation, The Charlotte W. Newcombe Foundation, William Penn Foundation, The Penn Mutual Charitable Trust, Pennwalt Foundation, The Pew Memorial Trust, Philadelphia Electric Company, The Philadelphia Foundation, Philadelphia National Bank, Provident National Bank, Prudential Foundation, Rohm and Haas Company, Sears-Roebuck Foundation, W. W. Smith Charitable Trust and The Sun Company, Inc.

Through the pledges and grants that have been committed to Phase II of the Campaign for the 80's, the University has begun to make significant progress toward the achievement of the following priorities:

- Restoration of the Belfield Mansion, which now houses the President's Office, and construction of new tennis courts and additional parking on the Belfield Estate.
- Demolition of several of the older buildings on the Good Shepherd property to make space for outdoor athletic/recreational fields and parking.
- Acquisition of instructional equipment, including computer hardware and software, for the Science departments.
- Development of a Management and Training Center for Delaware Valley Non-Profit Organizations.
- Creation of an Endowed Chair in Accounting.
- Increased private support for Student Financial Aid.
- Expansion of the Urban Studies Center's Adult Learning Project.

Finally, a word of special recognition and congratulations for the outstanding success of this year's Annual Fund Program. Through the leadership of Brother Charles E. Gresh, F.S.C., Director, the Annual Fund Committee (Chairman: Lawrence E. McAlee, Esq.), the Volunteer Phonathoners (Chairman: John J. French), the Parents' Association (Chair-couple: Richard and May Duszak), and the Alumni (Chairmen: Theodore H. Mecke, Jr., John B. Beal, William J. Markmann, M.D.), Major Gifts (Chairmen: Henry G. DeVincent, M.D., Richard L. Duszak, C.P.A.) and University (Chairmen: James E. Biechler, Ph.D., Gloria F. Donnelly, Ph.D., R.N., F.A.A.N., and Charles A. J. Halpin, Jr., M.A., J.D.), Committees of Phase II of the Campaign for the 80's, this year's Annual Fund Program surpassed all of its major goals and shattered all previous past records for individual support for La Salle. In 1985-86, 5,308 Alumni contributed $945,313 to La Salle compared to the previous (1984-85) record of 3,605 alumni who donated $600,998 to the University, and the number of new alumni donors increased by over 400%. Similarly, 502 Parents contributed $32,756 during the past fiscal year, 179 Faculty/Staff members donated $46,451 to La Salle, principally through payroll withholding, and 208 corporations and corporate foundations awarded 661 matching gifts totaling $75,420. For its success in 1984-85, La Salle's Annual Fund Program was nominated as a Finalist for one of the Incentive Awards presented by the United States Steel Foundation, Inc. and the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education, and we are optimistic that the Program will receive a comparable nomination in recognition of its tremendous achievements in 1985-86.

1985-86 has, therefore, been an exceptionally good year for La Salle University, Phase II of its Campaign for the 80's, and its Annual Fund Program. Nevertheless, we have a long way to go to reach our goals. In the months ahead, we will be redoubling our efforts to increase alumni and corporate support for La Salle, and we are confident that your loyalty and support will ensure our success in this critical endeavor.

As nearly everyone understands, support for any good work resembles a pyramid in structure. The broad base of relatively modest but truly sacrificial contributions is essential to the crowning capstones of extraordinary munificence. Off-campus decision makers always ask, "How are your own people doing?" It is not only pleasant but crucial that we can continue to show an upward curve in the participation of alumni and alumnae, and of other long-time friends, as the great world takes more and more notice of our distinctive educational work.

All of us at La Salle University deeply appreciate the continuing commitment and assistance of all of those persons and organizations—Trustees, Alumni, Parents, Administrators, Faculty Members, Friends, Students, Foundations and Corporations—whose support has contributed so significantly to the vitality of the institution.

Sincerely yours,

Brother Patrick Ellis, FSC

HIGHLIGHTS

All gifts and grants reported involve contributions received between July 1, 1985 and June 30, 1986. Multiyear pledges and contributions received after July 1, 1986 will be reported in subsequent Annual Reports as payments are received. In accordance with Internal Revenue Service regulations, gifts of securities have been reported at the mean (average) between their highest and lowest values on the date the gifts were made to La Salle University. Every effort has been made to assure the accuracy of the donor list. Occasionally, a donor's name is inadvertently misspelled or omitted. If, by chance, an error has been made, please accept our sincere apology and notify us of the mistake (215-951-1539). Several of the contributions listed below are duplicated in more than one category (e.g. an individual contribution in excess of $1,000 that is also included in the Alumni total). The unduplicated total of gifts and grants listed in this report for 1985-86 is $7,126,205.

THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS

Over the past 123 years the contributed services of the Christian Brothers, the sponsoring religious order at La Salle University, have been considerable. These religious who serve as faculty, administration, and staff members have contributed $224,626 to this year's Annual Fund. This is but one measure of their devotion and dedication to La Salle and the principles upon which the University was founded during the Civil War. It is a small wonder, then, that this amount is referred to as the University's living endowment.

PARENTS' PROGRAM

La Salle University Parents—502 of them—contributed $32,756.20 to the largest Parents' Fund ever. Because of their generosity, this fund increased 19 percent over 1984-85; moreover, thirty-nine parents had their gifts matched by their employers through the Matching Gift program for a total of $4,520.

As chaircouple of the Parents' Committee, we hope that the increased participation by parents in the Annual Fund exemplifies the potential for La Salle parents to become involved in a variety of activities.

Parents are significant members of the La Salle family. They are second only to the alumni as a group whose active support makes La Salle a vital institution of higher learning.

Parents' involvement with the University as volunteers, mentors, and advocates for the Admissions Office, as well as their role as donors, insures the promise of La Salle's future.

The Annual Fund Office deeply appreciates the generosity of these companies that hosted the phonathons:

Coopers and Lybrand

Fidelity Bank
First Pennsylvania Bank
Industrial Valley Bank and Trust Company
Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company

ACE FELLOW: Brother Joseph F. Burke, '68, chairman of the Psychology Department has been named a 1986-87 American Council on Education Fellow. This prestigious program is designed "to strengthen leadership in American higher education by identifying and preparing faculty and staff for responsible positions in college and university administration."

TRUMAN SCHOLAR: Elizabeth J. Vrato, a junior at the university, was the only student of a Pennsylvania college or university selected to receive a Harry S. Truman Foundation scholarship given to students who demonstrate outstanding potential for leadership in government and public service. She received the award from the late president's daughter, Margaret, in ceremonies at the Truman Library, in Independence, Mo. It pays all expenses for the last two years of undergraduate studies and the first two years of graduate or law school.

FATHER & SON: La Salle's Bill Wilkinson was selected Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference Coach-of-the-Year for the third time in a row in 1985 and his son, Bob, a junior at the university, was named to the league's All Star team.

WINNING PLAYWRIGHT: William D. (Bill) Wine, an assistant professor of communication arts at the university, had his full-length drama, Tenure, chosen over 195 other plays to be produced in June by the Dalton Little Theatre New Play Project, in Georgia. Last year, Wine was awarded a $6,000 Theatre Association of Pennsylvania Fellowship in support of writing Tenure. The grant was awarded to Wine on the strength of his play, Jolts, a full-length drama that was produced earlier this year at the University of Alabama-Birmingham.

ings in 1985-86. Here are some of them.

SCHOLAR-ATHLETE: Chip Greenberg, '86, who majored in marketing and personnel/labor relations, was selected as the outstanding senior student-athlete by both the university and the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference. He was also chosen to receive the MAAC's annual $1,000 grant for post-graduate study awarded to the league's outstanding senior basketball player. With Jill Crandley receiving similar awards, it marked the first time that two players from the same school have been honored in the same year.

SCHOLAR-ATHLETE: Jill Crandley, '86, who made the Academic All America team as a computer science major, was selected as the outstanding senior student athlete by both La Salle and the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference. She was also chosen by the MAAC to receive the annual $1,000 grant for post-graduate study awarded to the league's outstanding senior basketball player.

FULBRIGHT SCHOLAR: Maria Theresia Becker, '86, has been awarded a Fulbright Foundation Fellowship to study for a year at the University of Graz, in Austria. She majored in German and Russian at La Salle and will study the works of Christine Lavant, the modern Austrian poetress. Since 1965, some 39 La Salle graduates have been named Fulbright scholars.

GOODWILL AMBASSADOR: All America swimmer Ronald Karnaugh, a junior biology major, represented the United States at the recent Goodwill Games, in Moscow, and won two bronze medals for third place finishes in the 200 meter individual medley and as a member of the 400 meter freestyle relay team.

President Emeritus Brother Daniel Burke, who chaired the Library Committee during the planning stages, checks architect's sketches with Jean W. Haley, the university's director of library services.

Construction Begins on University's New Library

Groundbreaking ceremonies were held on June 9 for the new La Salle University Library that will be constructed on the southwest corner of 20th st. and Olney ave. and is expected to be ready for occupancy by September, 1988.

The new library will have the capacity for 500,000 volumes and provide seating and study space for 1,000 students. The 105,000 square foot structure will contain three full floors with a fourth "stack-supported" floor providing additional capacity.

La Salle's new library will also house an audio visual department, the instructional materials center, and a student lounge. Some of the student study/reading space will be situated under a picturesque 80 foot skylight that will enhance the aesthetic quality of the structure. A tastefully furnished "Special Collection Room" will provide elegant reading space.

Jean W. Haley, La Salle's director of library services, said that the new library will eventually accommodate the most sophisticated information retrieval.

"It will include the latest advances in information storage and retrieval," Ms. Haley said, "one of which will be a computerized catalogue. Access to bibliographic data bases at remote sites will also be available in addition to publications on optical disks."

La Salle's new library was designed by Shepley, Bulfinch, Richardson, and Abbott, perhaps the nation's best-known library architects. The Boston-based firm has served as architects for libraries at Bucknell, Franklin and Marshall, Colgate, and Harvard Universities. Nason and Cullen, Inc., of Rosemont, will serve as construction managers.

La Salle's present library facilities are housed in two buildings on campus. The David Leo Lawrence Library was constructed in 1952 when the college had an undergraduate enrollment of 2,250 full and part-time students. The Wister Hall Annex was added in 1973-74. Even though this facility increased library space by 50 percent, a larger library is needed to accommodate the university's 6,500 undergraduate and graduate students.

Brother President Patrick Ellis presents honorary doctor of humane letters degree to former U.S. Senator J. William Fulbright as Fulbright's sponsor, Regan Henry, watches during commencement ceremonies.

Fulbright Honored at 123rd Commencement

Former U.S. Senator J. William Fulbright, the architect of the world's most famous international educational exchange program, was honored as a man who "has been productive of so much good in the world" at the university's 123rd Commencement on May 18 at Philadelphia's Civic Center-Convention Hall.

Fulbright, who represented the state of Arkansas in the U.S. Senate from 1944 to 1974, received an honorary doctor of humane letters degree. He was sponsored by Regan Henry, a member of La Salle's Board of Trustees and a prominent local attorney.

Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D., conferred bachelor's degrees on 973 men and women including 237 Evening Division students. Another 177 men and women received master's degrees in business administration; 42 were awarded master's degrees in religious education; 13 received master's degrees in bilingual/bicultural studies (Spanish); nine were awarded master's degrees in pastoral counseling, and three others received master's degrees in education.

In his citation presenting the former Senator for his honorary doctorate, Henry praised the Fulbright Program for generating exchanges among nations exclusively for peaceful purposes and for touching the lives of individuals everywhere in the world.

"The Fulbright program has sent Americans of compassion and common sense, of intellect and creative imaginations, and of empathy and understanding" to Europe, Africa, Asia and the Middle East, explained Henry, adding that the program "exists in accordance with the conception of its founder to improve the quality of life of all people."

La Salle's Brother President Ellis praised Senator Fulbright as a man who has individually made a significant impact on the whole world.

"As our need to relate positively with other nations becomes more evident by the day," La Salle's president said, "your vision is all the more relevant since it has given us a cadre of citizens with direct experience of those nations."

Fulbright chaired the Senate Foreign Relations Committee longer than any other senator (15 years). He introduced the original legislation in 1946 that authorized the use of nonconvertible foreign currencies acquired from the sale of surplus war equipment to finance grants for American citizens to study and teach abroad and for foreign students to study in the United States.

Expanded and modernized by passage of the Fulbright-Hays Act in 1961, the program has become an international educational venture unprecedented in size and scope. Since 1965,

La Salle, has been one of the leading institutions in the East providing Fulbright scholars with 39 of its graduating seniors receiving such awards. The Fulbright program was also the first American program to provide extensive opportunities for international exchange of elementary and high school teachers.

Fulbright, who once served as president of his alma mater, the University of Arkansas, attended Oxford University, in London, as a Rhodes Scholar, then received a law degree from George Washington University. While in the U.S. Senate, he also was chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. Since 1975, he has served as counsel with the law firm of Hogan and Hartson, in Washington, D.C.

La Salle's annual U.S. Army Reserve Officers Training Corps (ROTC) commissioning ceremony for 13 new officers was held on May 17 on campus. The university's annual Baccalaureate Mass was held later that day at the Cathedral Basilica of SS Peter and Paul.

Bob Mullen Named Bradshaw's Successor As Athletic Director

Bob Mullen, director of athletics at the University of Southern Colorado since 1981, has been appointed the university's director of intercollegiate athletics and recreation. He succeeds Bill Bradshaw, '69, who resigned in May to become director of athletics at DePaul University.

The recommendation of Mullen's appointment was made by the university's Athletic Committee and approved by Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D.

Bob Mullen

"From a pool of well-qualified candidates, Bob Mullen emerged as an outstanding choice," said Brother Patrick. "He has an extraordinary depth of experience in similar positions, and has a grasp of our philosophy of the role of athletics and higher education."

"La Salle has a philosophical situation which agrees with me," said Mullen. "Basketball has been a big part of my life, and now being associated with the type of student-athlete that represents La Salle is a dream-come-true. "Coming back to the Delaware Valley is also important. My father lives in Cape May (NJ), and I have relatives throughout the area."

Mullen, 47, is a graduate of Northern Illinois University, with a bachelor of science degree in history and a master of science degree in guidance and counseling. His first head coaching positions were at Galena (IL) High School, where his basketball teams had a 189-59 overall record and won seven straight conference championships. He was also Head Coach of football (18-6 record), golf (three conference titles), cross country and baseball.

In 1974, he was appointed director of athletics and head coach of basketball and golf at Loras College in Dubuque, Iowa. Both the basketball and golf teams reached NAIA finals under his leadership. He also instituted a Division III football program at Loras, and aided in planning and development of both a civic arena and intramural center.

Since 1981 Mullen has been director of athletics at Southern Colorado in Pueblo. Among his accomplishments at USC were: European tours for both the men's and women's basketball teams; promotion of an NAIA first-round football playoff game which set a record for attendance; and initiation of a wrestling program which ranked second in the NAIA after only three years as a varsity sport. He also served as interim director of alumni affairs for one year due to his success in that area in relation to the Athletic Department.

As a college coach, Mullen received NAIA District Coach-of-the-Year laurels for both basketball and golf while at Loras College, and had basketball teams visit and compete in 10 foreign countries.

An active administrator on the national level, Mullen is currently a voting delegate to the United States Olympic Committee-United States Sports Council. He recently returned from Moscow's Goodwill Games where he was an administrator appointed by the National Association of College Directors of Athletics (NACDA). He was president of the NAIA Athletic Directors Association; and is a Division II college representative to the Executive Committee of NACDA.

Mullen and his wife Marcia have four children: daughter Sherri is married with two daughters and lives in Dubuque, IA; son Scott will be a junior at Western State College in Gunnison, CO; daughter Kelly will begin her freshman year in college in September; and son Rob will be a sophomore in high school.

McCloskey Retires as Vice President; Named Public Affairs Head

John L. McCloskey, '48, retired as vice president for public affairs at the university on June 30 and assumed a newly-created position of director of public affairs.

McCloskey, a member of the La Salle staff for 40 years, had been a vice president at the university for 27 years. In his new position, he will be responsible for all of the institution's local, state, and federal government relations as well as community liaison duties, and will serve as a representative of the president at designated activities.

A native Philadelphian and a graduate of Northeast Catholic High School, McCloskey received a bachelor's degree in accounting from La Salle in 1948 and a master's degree in marketing from Temple University in 1957.

McCloskey was a B-17 pilot and pilot instructor in the U.S. Army Air Corps during World War II. He joined the La Salle staff in 1946 as manager of the Campus Store, a position he held until 1954. Between 1950 and 1952, McCloskey also served as assistant professor of military science in the ROTC program. He was named assistant to La Salle's president in 1955 and also served on the university's faculty as an associate professor of marketing.

A fellow of the Case Institute Economics in Action Program (1964),

John L. McCloskey

McCloskey is chairman of the Philadelphia Mayor's Scholarship Committee. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia, and a member of the advisory board of CORA. He is also a member of the board of St. Gabriel's System and faculty advisor for the Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE). He was recipient of a La Salle University Centennial Award in 1963 and the La Salle Alumni Association's John J. Finley Memorial Award in 1972.

McCloskey and his wife, the former Elizabeth Patton, reside in the Somerton section of Philadelphia and have four children: John R., M.D., an orthopedic surgeon at Shore Memorial Hospital, Somers Point, N.J.; James, a small business consultant; (Mrs.) Catherine Kane, a substitute teacher with the Philadelphia Public School System, and Daniel, a real estate salesperson. The four are graduates of La Salle University.

Brother Patrick Sheekey: "A Most Effective, Influential & Ideal Teacher"

Brother Edward Patrick Sheekey, F.S.C., '29, former chairman of the university's English Department where he taught the fine craft of writing to thousands of students for almost 40 years, died on April 3 at the Villa of Divine Providence in Lansdale. He was 82.

A native of nearby Germantown, Brother Patrick was a member of the Brothers of the Christian Schools for 58 years. He joined La Salle's faculty in 1946 and quickly established a reputation as one of the finest writing teachers in higher education. He was one of the first recipients of a coveted Lindback Award for distinguished teaching.

In addition to sharpening the creative skills of thousands of La Salle students, Brother Patrick published several writing textbooks and numerous articles of fiction and non-fiction. He founded Four Quarters, one of the nation's most respected literary magazines, and served as its editor for the first ten years.

In 1974, Brother Patrick was awarded the Benemerenti Papal Medal in recognition of his "long and distinguished" 59-year teaching career. In 1981, the university's Writing Center in Olney Hall was named after him. He retired in 1975.

Brother Patrick earned a bachelor's degree in English education and a master's degree in theology from La Salle. He also did graduate work at Johns Hopkins and Columbia Universities, the Universities of Pennsylvania and Pittsburgh, and The Catholic University of America.

Before coming to La Salle, he taught at elementary schools in Philadelphia and Jersey City, N.J., as well as Calvert Hall High School, in Baltimore; Central Catholic High School, in Pittsburgh; St. John's College High School, in Washington, and West Catholic and La Salle High Schools, in Philadelphia. He also served as principal at La Salle Institute, in Cumberland, Md.

Brother Patrick wrote a number of high school textbooks and literature anthologies including Joy in Reading, Appreciation Through Reading, New American Profile, and English Voices.

La Salle University's provost, Brother Emery Mollenhauer, F.S.C., Ph.D., eulogized Brother Patrick at his Mass of Resurrection in the La Salle University Student Chapel, on campus, April 8.

"We remember him for his delight in language and good writing," Brother Emery said in part. "His own search for the right word demonstrated an ability to characterize a colleague with an exactness that was at times humorous, occasionally acerbic, and often just uncanny."

"For most of us," La Salle's provost added, "he was above all, a teacher. More than that, however, he was a leader in that brave band of American academics who can teach a person to write. Never counting the hours, he saw each student through the labor of revision, withholding the too-facile grade until the work was worthy of its author. However, this concern for craft and discipline was only the basis for a far richer, deeply religious tie to his students. Working from the basis of a healthy academic rigor and a certain smiling formality, he caused many to think clearly about the largest issues of life, and through self-expression to reach self-discovery."

Brother Emery recalled an observation made by Charles Kelly, who succeeded Brother Patrick as chairman of the English Department: "Brother Patrick Sheekey is the most effective, influential, and ideal teacher I have ever met," said Kelly. "Frequently I have witnessed the absolutely dull student's enthusiasm translated into effective and commercially successful performance as a result of Brother Patrick's inspiration. Through the years Brother Patrick has modified the thinking and attitudes of many people, and has always been a force for good, in the true Catholic sense, wherever he exercised his ministry."

Brother Sheekey was buried on April 9 at the Christian Brothers' Cemetery in Ammendale, Md. He is survived by a sister, Helen.

THE WRITING TEACHER

I am forgetting the words,
he confided one evening.
We saw more often then
how his door was swung shut,
how the room began slowly to slide into unaccustomed hesitations, a clutter of slurring
and broken phrase,
into an empty ruin finally that each day filled with the sunlight of what we could remember and the dark glimmering
of what he could not.
But now at last
he's found the word
he was looking for,
the clear sum
of untrammelled eloquence,
the shining wisdom beyond
sun and moon and stars.

—Brother Daniel Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D.
President Emeritus

La Salle Music Theatre commemorated its 25th anniversary as the nation's only college-sponsored professional summer music theatre with special ceremonies honoring four of its pioneers immediately prior to its opening night performance of "Oklahoma!" on July 8 in the Dan Rodden Theatre on campus.

La Salle University Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D., conferred President's Medals on Dennis Cunningham, '59, and Bob Bolsover, '53, who starred in many of Music Theatre's early productions; Sid MacLeod, the theatre's original technical director, and Jean Williams, its first choreographer.

"Oklahoma," directed by Brother Gene Graham, F.S.C., who has been producer of Music Theatre since 1978, continued until August 3.

A favorite in many of the early Music Theatre productions, Cunningham has been arts and entertainment editor for WCBS-TV, in New York, since 1978.

In addition to starring in such La Salle hits as "Carousel," "The Fantasticks," "Camelot," and "Finian's Rainbow," Cunningham directed "The Most Happy Fella" and "Lady in the Dark" in 1966, and "The Music Man" in 1967. He was also a member of La Salle's English Department faculty for 13 years before joining Philadelphia's WCAU-

TV as arts and entertainment editor in 1975.

Bolsover has starred in the leading role, directed, and/or vocally directed 32 Music Theatre productions since the theatrical group was formed in 1962.

When Bolsover re-created his splendid portrayal of Emile in "South Pacific" in 1978 (after having initially drawn rave reviews in that role at Music Theatre back in 1964), he also pulled off an almost-unprecedented theatrical feat—serving as the show's director and vocal director at the same time. He is a member of the Language Department at Neshaminy High School.

MacLeod is the only person who was associated with every one of the 35 shows produced in Music Theatre's first 16 years through 1977. He also designed several of its early hit productions and directed "How To Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," in 1975, "Sing, America, Sing," in 1976, and "The Boys from Syracuse," in 1977.

The producer of Music Theatre from 1975 to 1977, MacLeod is an assistant professor of communication arts on the La Salle University faculty. His daughter, Mary, played the feature role in last year's Music Theatre production of "Sweet Charity."

Williams was responsible for the highly imaginative dancing that characterized the initial Music Theatre productions from 1962 to 1967. She returned as the Music Theatre choreographer in 1978 and has been putting La Salle's dancers through their paces ever since.

In addition to conducting the Jean Williams School of Dance in Germantown, she is also founder and artistic director of the Germantown Dance Theatre. Many of her proteges—including the great Judith Jamison—have appeared on Broadway.

More than 500,000 people have attended the performances of 49 different Music Theatre attractions since it was founded by Rodden, a long-time professor of English at La Salle, who died in 1978.

A number of former Music Theatre stars have gone on to successful careers in the entertainment industry.

They include Pat Cronin, '63, who has appeared in such TV shows as "All in the Family," "Alice," and "Too Close for Comfort"; Melanie Mayron, the film star who appeared with Jack Lemmon in "Missing"; Marcus Brown, '75, dance captain for the Broadway hit "Bubbling Brown Sugar," and Miss Jamison, who had a special dance created by Rodden just to showcase her beautiful skills in the 1964 Music Theatre production of "South Pacific."

William S. Pierce, M.D. (second from right), chief of the division of artificial organs at Milton Hershey Medical Center who developed the "Penn State heart," delivered the seventh annual Holroyd Lecture at the university on May 2. His topic: "Hi-Tech Care of Heart Disease: Opportunities and Limitations." Prior to the lecture, the annual Holroyd Award was presented to Dr. Ralph Tekel (second from left), who recently retired after many years of service as a member of the Chemistry Department, and in the memory of the late Brother Claude Demitras. Brother James J. Muldoon, dean of arts and sciences, holds the plaque honoring Brother Claude, while Brother President Patrick Ellis stands at left.

STATE OF THE UNIVERSITY

By Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D.

The recent visit of the Middle States Association resulted in the reaffirmation of our full accreditation. The bottom line is that the reality of academic life at La Salle met with enthusiastic approval.

“Improving as a La Sallian School need in no way diminish us

This celebrated umbrella topic is offered once again because readers have rather consistently asked for it over the years. What actually happens is that many articles in this publication form a mosaic of the total institutional condition over a period of time. Brother Emery's curriculum really opened this round, and the two numbers-dominated reports on development and finances certainly planted our corporate feet firmly in another kind of reality. Bracketed with the present treatment, I have chosen to include my remarks from the faculty workshop of the current year, chiefly because they suggest a future thrust and direction in our distinctive character as a Christian Brothers' institution. What I get to do here are highlights.

In any survey of our condition, the stunning generosity of our principal but determinedly anonymous benefactor and that of his family must take first place by a country mile. Quite simply, the grant enabling construction of the new library is not only the largest in the history of our “league” in higher education; it is also most opportune and fitting. It enables us to live up to our announced priorities without mortgaging the futures of all concerned. As the structure moves toward its dedication, we hope to be freer to share all the information about the grant. Detailed coverage

A Message to the Faculty: What it Means to be a

Dear Colleagues:

This is about our being a La Sallian school. You will be alarmed to learn that it has been prepared. But please stay.

Sometimes I think the natural mode of thought for our time is the dilemma. Catch-22 has entered the language forever. The specter of the administrator immobilized by complexity looms on every side. Even in teaching a literary survey, honesty requires the mentioning of exceptions in the same breath as announcing the category, thus guaranteeing realistic confusion on the part of the student, which may or may not be preferable to the unreal neatness which we used to put forth...

Dancing in the street ties up traffic.

Should the big sign say “Conducted by the Brothers of the Christian Schools,” or “Sponsored” or “Founded”? ACCU tends now to speak of the FRG (past) rather than the SRB (now). (Founding Religious Group; Sponsoring Religious Body; Assoc. of Catholic Colleges and Universities).

Claude Pepper has presented Americans with five or more additional years of working life, often whether we want them or not. But the aging of our professional corps in all categories is no less inexorable, and our younger stars will all be hearing from the places that spurned them when they were first doctored, now that their eminent mentors are themselves on the far slope.

While you forgive some of us, then, a certain understandable preoccupation with the physical aspects of our master plan. I submit that the persons here assembled—plus other staff—are still by any measure the main reason people choose to come here. Almost incredibly, some families still let a few hundred dollars' difference in the financial aid package determine their college or university, basing a lifetime decision on pennies a day! On the other hand, most are guided by our main resource, yourselves, once they knew about you. And they certainly stay because of you.

It is important, once in a while, to have us looked at by new eyes. In the recent past, outside marketing consultants and new staff have quite independently come up with conclusions which we ourselves might otherwise have shrunk from announcing: the Brothers make a large positive difference. But not simplistically, let me hasten to add. Others can expand on this concept, but let me try in a beginning way.

The obvious impact is the classroom and other professional effectiveness of people who would be good even if they weren't Brothers. I don't intend to have the Brothers squirming with embarrassment over this, but there is solid witness value to an animating faith when people function professionally for religious reasons. That is not distinctive of our place compared to those of other religious congregations, except for our freedom from clericalism and its works and pomps. We have almost an “aw-shucks,” non-verbal theory of the apostolate of education. And we still have Brothers in their prime, and on the way up, and in the pipe line.

Less obvious, and less obviously but just as really fading, is the tremendous impact of faculty who have explicitly “bought in” to the distinctively La Sallian educational style. An outstanding cadre is composed of those who were Brothers at one time, and who carry over in a thousand ways the insights and style of those years. In the nature of things, this is a one-time phenomenon, not to be repeated on a large scale. Another group is the senior faculty, many of them alumni of Brother's high schools and colleges, who persevered through very lean times because of a conviction, often just as non-verbal as that of the Brothers, that the place filled a need and served a purpose beyond appearances, and outside the arbitrary pecking order of academic prestige.

Such a “buying in” is more difficult for more recent faculty. The post-Vatican II Brothers are a more diverse lot, and have been encouraged so to be by many laudable factors. External symbols are less in evidence. We hope the fundamental reality is the same, but it may be less accessible through the sheer fact of numbers. Explicit efforts to communicate it, as witness the famous faculty meeting at the tricentennial of the order, have come in for the most effective turn-off of all: massive absence, and the generous presence of the already saved. We haven't been able to emulate our confreres of other countries in bringing about, then, this broadly-based buying-in of the future spirit-determiners. It is too easy to attribute this disparity to cultural differences, e.g., of temperament or of stress on this affective side. If we have something special, we all have to find a way to hang onto it—better yet, enhance it, and not let it get away.

Why, then, did I start with the dilemma as the mode of thought proper to our time? Well, when we have Brothers ready, we can't get them in. Departments face a justice problem when others' credentials are superior—justice to students, I mean.

Not enough Brothers are minorities, and not enough of them are credentialed. None are women. Three parallel programs of affirmative action must be kept on track at once.

A gratifying number of the limited of the building itself will come along in some abundance in these pages.

Parallel to the library project but now separate from it is the Campaign for the 80's, Phase II. Among its priorities are several which can be clustered under implementation of the campus master plan. These items include adaptation of the current library building for now-scattered administrative functions, conversion of College Hall entirely to the school of business and conversion of the library annex (the old gym) to a student lounge, campus store, textbook store, and related facilities.

The former Good Shepherd property is now almost entirely given over to the playing fields (making possible the addition of women's varsity soccer and women's club-level lacrosse), and to parking, with jitney service to the center of campus. The Belfield property now houses six tennis courts, additional parking, and pleasant recreational space. In restored buildings are the president's office, security headquarters, several other administrative offices, and a branch of our museum. The historic greenhouses and gardens are progressing nicely, and there is hope for a grant-funded adaptation of the lowland cottage for oriental studies, including the Japanese tea ceremony. No visit to campus these days is complete withpool of younger Brothers are willing and able to pursue the doctorate, under circumstances that will make them productive scholar teachers—not like the harried high school teachers of my generation who got the union card but not quite a yen for the stacks. But we play a calculated game in encouraging them into fields where openings are likely and where studies are personally fulfilling to them. Open departmental commitment to this process is essential, in practice, to the vital continuance and growth of our university in its distinctiveness; and it is fully consistent with the other necessary forms of affirmative action.

(Footnote: 12 of 28 Jesuit institutions announce an "all other things being equal" policy for recruitment of Jesuit faculty. Over all, their history is not unlike ours, but on a much larger scale. As a rule of thumb, the better the department, and the better the college or university, the more trouble the sponsoring religious body has in getting its people in.)

But I'd better modify "better." It's an index of purely academic seriousness, of fidelity to a discipline for its own sake. I will never downgrade the primacy of such seriousness. But may I suggest a little institutional self-examination here and now on our distinctiveness within this seriousness. How deeply into the total faculty do our announced emphases really penetrate. How has each of us modified his or her courses or campus life in the past year to manifest:

- alertness to justice and peace issues;
- availability to young people who are damaged;
- interest in the way the coming generation uses its minds (it's that basic, I think);

- understanding of the priorities urged upon young people by all that's around them;
- awareness of the utter revolution in the American family, including the Catholic family;
- understanding of the value of life, born and unborn, terminally ill, terminally old, handicapped, retarded;
- interest in the worship and service dimensions of the university.

Of course, teaching and research are enough. But there are times when, looking around the national scene of Catholic higher education, we don't seem so hot. Now, I'm not playing a numbers game, and I realize as well as you do that results elsewhere can be presented very selectively. Maybe we look great to others, but it would be a sad sign if we looked unqualifiedly great to ourselves. We are not sufficiently permeated by our historically co-equal reason for being. Improving as a La Sallian school need in no way diminish us as an academic enterprise. Others have apparently brought off a better fusion; so can we.

No one can mandate faith. Nor can anyone require interior assent to any values. But wouldn't there be something gravely amiss if thousands of likeable young people gradually emptied out their lives with drugs, alcohol, and a nihilistic refusal to think long thoughts, while five hundred adults just watched them do it?

Please don't fear that we are in for a year of artificial religiosity. In another hour, I'll be safely back on the farm, and you in your offices. All I want is that we think about being more complete as a La Sallian institution. For each of the young people—and the not so young in the part-time programs—there's very little time. For a great many, there's nowhere else in their lives for them to fashion the persons they are meant to be. Everyone in an enterprise like this has a contribution to make to each of those masterpieces. Basic human formation can't be someone else's job. Not here. Not with that name out front.

out a tour of the "farm."

The physical substratum of our educational enterprise will, to be sure, never be "finished." We intend to respond to several generous efforts at the grassroots level to achieve an all-weather running track on which competition can once again occur. In a manner yet to be precisely determined, we intend to provide space for several hundred more resident students. And when all that is done, our more mature buildings are sure to need major repairs, even though recent foundation grants have brought them fully up to standard as of now.

Priorities in the metaphysical realm, if you will, are also moving toward achievement, though these tend to carry the dual added challenge of being open-ended and less appealing to many donors. Student financial aid, endowed faculty chairs, and a funded sabbatical plan are all moving reasonably well. As careful readers of our financial reports can tell, we are within appropriate national parameters for our type of institution in the percentage of operating income which we return to the students in the form of grants. (A far greater amount, of course, is administered for government programs at all levels). Where we need to grow is in the student aid funded from a perpetual principal, analogous to endowment. Present and future development efforts must relentlessly stress this dimension.

Some of the most elusive truths to seek out, when writing of an institution, are the ones that matter most of all. Are we reaching the students with the values—theological and human—which brought the place into existence, and which in most minds are its reason for continuing to be. These values are, if you will, co-equal with those of academic seriousness. A great swatch of the public seems to feel that one must choose between the two sets of qualities. I think we have long passed that false dilemma. But what remains is the extreme difficulty of determining whether we are sending a clear message to this generation. Are a full third of them "on" something, as Secretary Bennett observes? Is government asking us to "do" something, having legislated us out of virtually all our clout? How, in any case, do we educate for freedom and at the same time hedge the students in like adolescents "for their own good?"

The principal outside agency that assays our condition has said the best it ever says, O.K. The visit

A Welcome to the Freshmen:

"What Urges Us to Communicate is the Goal We Share: Your Formation B

Dear Friends:

You are welcome, and I think you know it! You are not strangers, having in most cases made open house, DDP and PCCP, not to mention individual and group pilgrimages to the majors of your choice. It is gratifying to us to see that you have opted for La Salle in the face of quite an array of choices available to you.

During these several days, a cadre of dedicated staff and fellow students will be furnishing a large, even vast amount of information about La Salle University. You will be hard put to absorb it all, but you wouldn't be here if you lacked the ability so to do.

I have two topics, one that won't come up in anyone else's discourse and another that may arise but perhaps not from this precise viewpoint. The first is our university's name and why it is what it is; the second is my generation's thoughts about you. Because of the urgency of this latter topic, I'm going to start with it. In your crowded day, in a clammy climate, I'll ask you to summon your powers of concentration and stay with me.

About the young, the middle-aged have had mixed emotions for thousands of years. It's very basic human nature to regret the passing of time. Many great poems are really about time, and the effort to freeze-frame our best moments, as we can't. But of course we of the far slope are inconsistent; we don't want to get our Ph.D.'s all over again, nor (for the religious) make another novitiate, or (for the married) face Pampers again, nor undergo any of life's other boot camps.

This by way of introduction, because many feel that, within that standard regretful envy, today's elders have a more difficult time than usual in coming to know you. The exclusiveness of many teen-age and young adult enthusiasms is greater now than at some other times in history: at least one has this impression. (And we operate from impression at least as much as we do from data.) Many older adults, I think, can't imagine that you really enjoy the Walking Wounded, the Twisted Sisters, or the Spiteful Kiteful, so they assume you play them just to be difficult and annoying in the house. Just as you can't fathom Mom's enjoyment of General Hospital, As the World Churns, or the Emmy-winning The Young and the Vaguely Upset.

But our enterprise requires genuine communication between generations. There is nothing more ludicrous than a fiftieth academic trying to share the enthusiasm of people thirty years his or her junior, so we have to be in touch at levels far deeper than fads. What urges us to communicate is the goal we share: your formation by yourself of the person you are capable of becoming.

Educators have often been flattered by a comparison with sculptors. The unhappy expression is to mold the minds of the young. I doubt if that has ever been quite right. Closer to reality, I submit, is the coaxing of one's potential into reality by teachers, friends, parents, counsellors—you name them, but with the main energy and drive coming from within. To make use of the resources at hand, you have to make room for our generation in the life of your mind. The best of you have already done this in high school.

There may be more continuity between generations than you think.

You don't have, for instance, a monopoly on nuclear angst. I was a high school junior when the first bomb was dropped, changing the world forever—and we sensed it that day. I was a high school principal when JFK was assassinated, and we knew intuitively that a certain civility was gone forever—that day. We just share the human condition of uncertainty more poignantly than our forebears; but is fundamentally much of the Middle States Association resulted in the reaffirmation of our full accreditation. Much of what the Commission on Higher Education had to say is meant for very limited circulation in-house, but the bottom line is that the reality of academic life at La Salle met with enthusiastic approval, as did the self-study process, in which nearly two hundred faculty and staff played a part. This doesn't mean we relax for ten years, of course, but it represents achievement of a major intermediate goal.

I submit, then, that our almost sudden achievement of several major goals has thrown us back, at an opportune time, on the need to look at perhaps the most fundamental one: we have to mean something to our students, parents, alumni and one another from an eternal perspective. Not in one way to the Catholics and in some kind of lesser way to everyone else. What we do is worth doing in itself, and it is enriched by the nature of the persons with whom we work. Bearing this reality in mind will not cause us to coat the academic pill with time-release piety. (We never did, either, though sometimes accused of so doing). It will, however, motivate us to be the best place around, no matter how many generations it takes us to get the word out.

Brother Ellis, who has been President of the university since 1977, is 1986-87 chairman of the Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities.

'Yourself of the Person You are Capable of Becoming'

the same as when a tidal wave hit ancient Peru, or lightning set the brush afire on the western plains, so far as the threat to life then and there is concerned. What's different is the scale.

Let me move to my other topic. I submit to you that it is important for you to know something about the person for whom the university is named. You may already, if you attended a school where there are Brothers, or even if you have read the catalogue more closely than most.

The place was named in 1863 in honor of St. John Baptist de La Salle, founder of the Christian Brothers and patron of all teachers. St. La Salle was a priest of Reims, France, who responded generously to the needs of his time when government did nothing to educate children, and when—as a result—no one taught the children of working people and the poor.

For the religious and humane education of girls, De La Salle served as what we would call a consultant to several groups of sisters. But there was no parallel order for boys—since women didn't customarily teach such creatures then and there. Families, of course, were so grindingly tied down to survival that they couldn't manage to teach the young apprentice hoods either. By providential stages, then, La Salle brought into being an order of lay religious, with vows, whose main work was to be the religious and human formation of boys and young men. This order, founded 306 years ago, has become world-wide, has—obviously—expanded to co-education, but has tried to stay close to its original spirit and purpose.

On campus this year, you will meet Brothers from the Philippines, from Israel, from Vietnam, and even from Chicago, who are pursuing advanced studies. You will meet Brothers who prefer the original robe, others who choose the varied coat and tie, and others who opt for the outfit you see this minute. These are all authorized religious habits in our rules. Unity of purpose, not uniformity of externals, is the point here.

I mention all this because people will ask you when they hear that you attend La Salle. And even though we have worked in this valley—as a group—since 1848, there are still folks who wonder why we're not ordained. The answer is both simple and complex. Simply, De La Salle and his first Brothers believed that an order with priests in it would be drawn into other good works and abandon the kinds of schools he and they had in mind. Today, we walk a thin line of adaptation to the needs of time and place, and fidelity to the original insight. It should go without saying that Brothers have to have at least the same intelligence as priests, whatever your Aunt Tilly or Uncle Herman may think.

In reality, of course, you will be taught here for the most part by dedicated lay men and women, and by Sisters, Brothers, and priests. Various faith commitments are represented on the faculty as well. What we all have in common is a fusion of the demands of our academic fields with a devotion to the purpose of this university, which is your growth into that person you are meant to be. No two faculty are alike in their personal chemistry of goals, spirit, and method. But we are as one in our hopes for you. And the same goes for the administrative staff.

I am more than willing to think all this through in your company at a more leisurely time. What I have tried to do here is to put some basic ideas before you, and I certainly appreciate your efforts to rise to a challenging topic on a challenging day.

Financial Report - June 30, 1986

To The President and Trustees of La Salle University

INTRODUCTION

We are pleased to submit the annual Financial Report of La Salle University for the fiscal year 1985-86. This report includes financial statements prepared by the Office of the Vice President for Business Affairs and the public accounting firm of Marucci, Ortals, Annett & Geisel. It statistically and graphically illustrates some of the more important areas of financial activity and the continuing development of the University.

Fiscal 1985-86 was a year of excitement and unprecedented outcomes for the fund raising activities of the University. Gifts and grants recorded in Current Funds were $3,162,792, the second highest ever in the history of the University. Additionally, a gift of $3,600,000 was recorded in unexpended plant funds, $2,581 in Term and Life Income Funds, and $57,598 in Restricted Endowment Funds. Total gifts and grants received in all funds were a record breaking $6,822,971. Affirmation was received that the pledge of $5.5 million last year was to be used for the construction of a new library and that the donor was pledging an additional $5.5 million for a total of the $11 million needed to fund the total cost of the project. At June 30, 1986 total outstanding gift pledges were $7,594,669 which includes the $5.5 million commitment for the new library. It is at best an understatement to suggest that the word extraordinary describes the fund raising and capital programs of the University for fiscal 1985-86.

Full-time enrollment in the undergraduate day programs, as measured at the opening of the fall semester, was 2,960; a decline of 2.7% from the previous year's total of 3,040. Freshman intake continues to increase and was 768 this year; a growth of 8.1% over the 710 freshman of last year. However, overall enrollment did decline in spite of the larger freshman intake, primarily as a result of the last of the unusually large graduating classes. With the last of these larger classes now graduated, maintenance or increase in the freshman class size will now have a direct positive impact on revenues.

The charge for tuition in the full-time day programs was $5,590 which represented an increase of $600 over last year. Total tuition revenue, after adjustments for refunds and uncollectibles increased 6.2% to total $22,551,050. This $1,321,034 increase in tuition revenues came primarily from the day division in the amount of $1,176,403. Traditional evening programs were up by $382,177; however, a decline of $203,298 in Auxiliary Campus Programs combined with a modest increase in the summer resulted in a net increase in evening and part-time programs of $197,992 over the previous year. The Masters of Business Program declined just over 4% or $78,020. Other graduate programs changed little from last year.

ENDOWMENTS

Earnings on unrestricted endowment funds totaled $523,992 and were retained in current funds. The net gain on the sale or exchange of assets of $343,481 remained in unrestricted endowments and an additional $542,250 of fiscal 1985-86 gifts designated for Phase II of the Campaign for the 80's were transferred into unrestricted endowments. In addition, securities with a book value of $132,150 were transferred from unrestricted endowments to Unexpended Plant Funds designated for the library construction project. The end result of all activity was a net increase of $733,581 in Unrestricted Endowments.

Restricted Endowment Funds realized additional gifts of $57,598, earnings on investments of $161,636 and net gains on the sale of assets of $117,083. $123,885 of current year earnings were expended (applied) for the purposes designated by the fund, resulting in a net increase in the fund of $212,431.

With the confirmation of the project to construct a new library the $900,000 balance in Term Endowment Funds having been designated for this purpose was transferred to Unexpended Plant Funds.

EDUCATIONAL AND GENERAL EXPENDITURES

Educational and General expenditures increased approximately $1,065,000 or 5.4% over last year. The direct cost of instruction increased $438,000 (5.2%) primarily reflecting salary increases and some additional staffing of new sections and programs. Student services were funded at 8.8% and Public Affairs and Development at 18.5% recognizing increased University priorities identified in these areas. While the University continues to consider the maintenance of its physical facilities as a high priority, we were able to hold the cost of operating plant to an increase of only $38,000 or 1.4%, benefiting from reduced energy costs. The University continued its commitment to assisting students in meeting their educational expenses and increased its expenditures for student financial aid by $304,000 or 13.7% to a total of $2,522,873. Mandatory transfer increased $835,000 reflecting the debt service on outstanding revenue bonds which were issued for property acquisition, playing field construction, tennis courts, major renovations and equipment acquisition.

AUXILIARY ENTERPRISES

come for the three primary functions of residence halls, food service and campus store have performed far better than this summary figure would suggest. Residence hall operations were solidly in the black with a contribution of $270,416. Food Service operations, while still assimilating the overhead costs of the recently opened new resident dining facility, through the implementation of a computerized ordering system, staff realignment and an increase in meal plan sales, was able to produce a revenue surplus of $15,656. Campus store operations through increased marketing efforts of retail merchandise combined with an expanded margin provided by an increase in their "used book" operations produced their second ever largest surplus of $111,175. These successes were not without some disappointment in the operating loss of the Summer Music Theatre and Special Activities.

CAPITAL PROGRAMS

With the funding of the library construction project made certain during the fiscal year by the unprecedented gift of $11,000,000 from a single donor—who chooses to remain anonymous—the design of the building was completed by the architectural firm of Shepley Bulfinch Richardson and Abbott, Boston, Massachusetts and the firm of Nason & Cullen, Wayne, Pennsylvania, were selected as construction managers. Construction began in June 1986 and is scheduled to be completed in the spring of 1988. The existing library holdings will be moved during the summer of 1988 to be operational with the opening of school in September 1988.

During 1986-87 the University intends to issue additional revenue bonds, in an amount yet to be determined, to fund the conversion of the current library into academic and administrative office, College Hall into a School Business Administration, and the Wister Library Annex into a combined Text Book and Campus Store facility.

It is with enthusiastic expectation that we look to the coming year building on the base of strength confirmed and provided by the support of our alumnae, alumni, friends, faculty, staff and students and pledge the continued good stewardship of the resources so provided.

Respectfully submitted,

DAVID C. FLEMING

NOTE 3—Deferred Charges

Salaries, wages and other expenditures applicable to summer programs are deferred to the next fiscal year. Expenses incurred prior to June 30 on incomplete special activity projects are also deferred until the next fiscal year. The deferred charges also include Campus Store credits for books returned to the publisher for which the Campus Store "cost of sales" has been relieved.

NOTE 4—Student Loan Funds

Student Loan Funds are comprised of $5,149,862 and $5,107,681 in National Direct Student Loan Funds and $67,281 and $64,269 in funds applicable to the Gulf Student Loan Program for the years ended June 30, 1986 and 1985 respectively. The $5,149,862 and $5,107,681 in funds of the National Direct Student Loan Program are made up of $4,498,231 and $4,462,000 from the United States Government and $651,631 and $645,681 from La Salle University.

NOTE 5—Salaries and other accruals

The University offers faculty the option of receiving their contract salary over nine or twelve months. At June 30, 1986 and 1985 there were accrued faculty salaries totaling $524,672 and $454,972 due to be paid to the faculty during July and August 1986 and 1985 respectively.

At June 30, 1986 and 1985 administrative, staff and service personnel had accumulated vacation benefits of approximately $409,446 and $367,283 which in accordance with Financial Accounting Standards Board Statement Number 43, "Accounting for Compensated Absences" is included in this liability account balance. It is University policy that vacation entitlements cannot be accumulated; are not surrenderable for cash (except in certain limited circumstances); and, in most cases, non-faculty personnel are not replaced during periods of vacation or temporary absence.

NOTE 6—Deferred Income

Deferred income represents the tuition revenues of the summer programs recorded or collected prior to June 30, which in accordance with the fiscal policy of the University is accrued to the next fiscal year. It also includes funds received for certain grant and special activity projects, the cost for which have not yet been incurred or the projects are incomplete.

NOTE 7—Endowment Funds

Endowment and similar funds are divided into four groups: Restricted Endowment Funds which are funds subject to restrictions of the gift instruments requiring the principal be maintained in perpetuity; Term Endowment Funds which may be expended upon the passage of a stated period of time or the occurrence of a particular event; Life Income Funds which are contributed to the University and subject to the requirement that the donor receives income earned on the funds with payments terminating at a specified time; and Quasi-Endowment Funds (funds functioning as endowments) which have been established by the Board of Trustees any portion of which may be expended at Board Discretion.

NOTE 8—Unexpended and Retirement of Indebtedness Funds

Contracts have been let for the construction of a new library. Construction costs are estimated at $11,000,000 of which $158,802 has been spent as of June 30, 1986. Substantially all of the financing has been provided for by way of a gift from one source.

The 1984 La Salle University Revenue Bonds Series I issued by the Pennsylvania Higher Education Facilities Authority on behalf of the University requires a "Debt Service Reserve" fund be maintained in the amount of $540,000. The 1984 Series II Bonds issued under the same debt instrument require a "Debt Service Reserve" in the amount of $812,989. Both of these funds were established from a portion of the bond proceeds.

(a) As an assist in the financing of Olney Hall, the United States Government through the Department of Education has granted the University an "interest subsidy" applicable to the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company mortgage. The subsidy covers the spread between 3% and 9¼% on the annual debt service of 85% of the total eligible cost of Olney Hall which is a constant annual grant of $115,025 for a period of twenty-five years.

(b) Bonds issued by the Pennsylvania Higher Educational Facilities Authority. The University is obligated to the Authority under a loan instrument providing for payments equal to the amount of the debt service on the revenue bonds.

Aggregate maturities of mortgages and bonds payable for each of the five fiscal years subsequent to June 30, 1986 are as follows:

1987	$ 1,170,626
1988	1,182,305
1989	1,258,327
1990	1,356,019
1991	1,461,328
Thereafter	7,585,850
	$14,014,455

In May 1983, the University sold a $4,830,000 bond issue (Revenue Bonds, First Series of 1983) through the tax-exempt lending authority of the Pennsylvania Higher Educational Facilities Authority (the Authority). In October 1984, to refund the 1983 Bonds, the University sold a second bond issue (First Series of 1984) through the Authority amounting to $4,485,000. The proceeds from this issue together with other funds available from the 1983 Bonds were (i) irrevocably deposited into an escrow fund in accordance with the defeasance provisions contained in the trust indenture for the 1983 Bonds and (ii) were used to purchase direct obligations of, or obligations the principal and interest on which are unconditionally guaranteed by, the United States of America, which together with the interest earned thereon will be sufficient to make all payments of interest on and to redeem all principal of the 1983 Bonds.

For accounting purposes, the issuance of the 1984 Bonds to replace the 1983 Bonds constitutes an advance refunding and, accordingly, as of October 1, 1984, the 1983 Bonds ceased to be a liability of the University for the reason that the University satisfied the defeasance provisions of the related trust indenture.

NOTE 10—Supplemental Retirement Funds

The University has a contributory retirement plan for all of its full-time employees who are at least 25 years of age with at least 3 years of service. The University and the employees each contribute 5% of the employees' annual earnings to the plan. The contributions to the plan are placed with the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association for investment in an individual annuity for each employee. The University's contribution to this plan amounted to $391,932 and $367,637 for the years ended June 30, 1986 and 1985 respectively.

In addition to the regular University Retirement Plan the University has established and maintains a University total contributory prior service retirement plan which is managed through the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association. This plan provides supplemental retirement income for a closed group of employees who had eligible service prior to the implementation of the current "regular" retirement program of the University. The University's contribution to this plan amounted to $30,000 each year for the years ended June 30, 1986 and 1985.

The accumulated plan benefits and plan net assets for the University's defined benefit plan are presented below as of the most recent valuation dates; January 1, 1986:

Actuarial present value of accumulated vested benefits .....	$401,223
Net assets available for plan benefits .....	$468,643

The assumed rate of return used in determining the actuarial present value of accumulated plan benefits was 9%, compounded annually. As of January 1, 1986 the net assets available for plan benefits exceeded the actuarially computed value of vested benefits by $67,420.

NOTE 11—Pledges

Outstanding pledges at June 30, 1986 totaled $7,594,669 of which $5,500,000 is restricted to plant fund for the library project. Pledges are not reflected in the financial statements since it is not practicable to estimate the net realizable value of such pledges.

We have examined the Balance Sheets of La Salle University as of June 30, 1986 and 1985 and the related statements of current funds revenues, expenditures and other changes for the years then ended, and the statement of changes in fund balances for the year ended June 30, 1986. Our examinations were made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards and, accordingly, included such tests of the accounting records and such other auditing procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances.

In our opinion, the financial statements referred to above present fairly the financial position of La Salle University as of June 30, 1986 and 1985 and the changes in fund balances and the current funds revenues, expenditures and other changes for the years then ended, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a consistent basis.

Our examinations were made for the purpose of forming an opinion on the basic financial statements taken as a whole. The supplementary information included on forms 4 through 11 is presented for purposes of additional analysis and is not a required part of the basic financial statements. Such information has been subjected to the auditing procedures applied in the examinations of the basic financial statements and, in our opinion, is fairly stated in all material respects in relation to the basic financial statements taken as a whole.

SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

The significant accounting policies followed by La Salle University are described below to enhance the usefulness of the financial statements to the reader.

ACCRUAL BASIS

The financial statements of La Salle University have been prepared on the accrual basis except for depreciation accounting as explained under "fund accounting" and for gift pledges which are recorded when collected. The statement of current fund revenues, expenditures, and other changes is a statement of the financial activities of current funds related to the current reporting period. It does not purport to present the results of operations or the net income or loss for the period as would a statement of income or a statement of revenue and expenses.

To the extent that current funds are used to finance plant assets, the amounts so provided are accounted for as (1) expenditures, in the case of normal replacement of movable equipment; (2) mandatory transfers, in the cases of required provisions for debt amortization; and (3) transfers of a non-mandatory nature for all other cases.

FUND ACCOUNTING

In order to ensure observances of limitations and restrictions placed on the use of the resources available to the University, the accounts of the University are maintained in accordance with the principles of "fund accounting." This is the procedure by which resources for various purposes are classified for accounting and reporting purposes into funds that are in accordance with activities or objectives specified. Separate accounts are maintained for each fund; however, in the accompanying financial statements, funds that have similar characteristics have been combined into fund group. Accordingly, all financial transactions have been recorded and reported by fund group.

Within each fund group, balances restricted by outside sources are so indicated and are distinguished from unrestricted funds allocated to specific purposes by action of the Board of Trustees. Externally restricted funds may only be utilized in accordance with the purposes established by the source of such funds and are in contrast with unrestricted funds over which the Board of Trustees retains full control to use in achieving any of its institutional purposes.

Restricted endowment funds are subject to the restrictions of gift instruments requiring in perpetuity that the principal be invested and the income only be utilized. Quasi-endowment funds (funds functioning as endowments) have been established by the Board of Trustees, and any portion of unrestricted endowment funds may be expended at board discretion. Term endowment funds are similar to endowment funds except that upon the passage of a stated period of time or the occurrence of a particular event, all or part of the principal may be expended.

Investments are recorded at cost of purchase or at market value on date of gift. Gains and losses arising from the sale, collection, or other disposition of investments and other non-cash assets are accounted for in the fund which owned them. Ordinary income derived from investments, receivables, and the like is accounted for in the fund owning such assets, except for quasi-endowment fund earnings which are reported as revenues in unrestricted current funds.

All other unrestricted revenue is accounted for in the unrestricted current fund. Restricted gifts, grants, endowment income and other restricted resources are accounted for in the appropriate fund. Restricted current funds and grants are reported as revenues and expenditures in current fund when expended for current operating expenses.

Investments in land, buildings, improvements and equipment are carried at cost and depreciation of all property and equipment, other than automobiles and trucks, is not recognized. Depreciation on automobiles and trucks is provided for on a straight-line basis over their estimated useful lives.

Inventories are determined by specific identification and are valued at cost on the first in first out basis.

OTHER SIGNIFICANT POLICIES

Other significant accounting policies are set forth in the financial statements and the notes thereto.

A CHARITABLE WAY TO SAVE TAXES

For many, September marks the start of the Football Season. For those of us who are forward thinkers, it marks the start of the Christmas Shopping Season.

We compile a list of people who are to receive gifts and then watch for the "sales." One friend who frequently is left off of the list because that friend is going to receive a check and money is never on sale (not to mention there may not be anything left in the checking account after shopping for everyone else) is La Salle.

There is a gift, however, that you can give to La Salle, that in terms of being a bargain can match any department store sale. That gift is a gift of stock or bonds.

If you own stocks or bonds that have appreciated in value since you purchased them (or inherited them) you may donate them to La Salle and deduct as a charitable contribution the current market value on your income tax return. The beauty of this is that you escape recognition of capital gains.

For example: You paid $500 for 100 shares of a company ten years ago. Today those shares are worth $7,500. By donating the stock to La Salle, you can deduct $7,500 on your Federal Income Tax Return. If you sold the stock and wrote a check for $7,500, you would still receive a $7,500 deduction, BUT you would also pay income tax on $2,800 (the taxable portion of the capital gain).

(Note: If your stock had depreciated in value, you would have sold it in order to deduct the loss. You would then donate the proceeds to La Salle.)

Making a gift of stock or bonds is easy to do. If your securities are held by a broker or bank, simply instruct that institution to contact the Development Office at La Salle. La Salle will arrange for delivery to its custodian bank.

If you keep your securities in your safe-deposit box and you are going to deliver the gift to La Salle, DO NOT endorse the certificate. An endorsed stock or bond certificate is negotiable. Give La Salle the certificate and then mail to them a signed stock or bond power (an affidavit which when signed and attached to the certificate makes that certificate negotiable).

No sale lasts forever and such is the case with this tax saving device. The Tax Reform Act has eliminated the attractiveness of this type of gift. This is your last chance for a bargain way to help La Salle.

Alumni Annual Fund Sets $1 Million Goal

Inspired by the success of $945,000 contributed by the alumni in 1985-86, Lawrence E. McAlee, '59, in his second year as chairman of the Alumni Annual Fund has announced that a goal of one million dollars has been established for the 1986-87 campaign.

"We are particularly heartened by our alumni participation which has gone from 14.9 percent in 1984-85 to 22 percent in 1985-86—just above the national average. This total included 1,700 new givers," McAlee noted. "Our alumni support of La Salle's mission to produce students with strong moral values and professional leadership skills has given us the needed confidence to strengthen the role the Annual Fund can have in the overall growth of the university."

Increased alumni participation at the volunteer levels will be a factor in 1986-87. The "corporate segmentation" phase with personalized appeals targeted at matching companies employing ten or more alumni will be broadened. A special effort to include the participation of the younger alumni (classes from '71 to '85) will be established.
